"You as a town deserve much better than this," Glavin concluded.

Selectmen Chairman Ralph Dormitzer firmly said that much of what Glavin said was inaccurate and that the budget put forth was "an extraordinary thing."

The discussion was then opened up to Town Meeting floor where two citizens brought up their concerns, particularly concerning the school budget.

Rich Perkingson of King Street said "a miracle has happened," citing last year's override proposal that argued the desperate need for additional schools funding and now this year's level-services budget. He expressed disappointment in the school department, in regards to the proposed budget and the services.

"I want to see some action, maybe we need more citizen involvement," he said offering to participate, "I'm extremely interested in priority budgeting. I think it's time to get serious about what we do and how we do it."

Roy Fitzsimmons of Doane Street asked about state reimbursement of the METCO program and said the schools have excessive school administration. School business manager Dave DeGennaro explained that the town receives $2500 per METCO student and the school pays for two teacher salaries with the funds. That amount is far below the amount it takes to educate the student, he said.

MacCarthy, the School Committee chairman, spoke passionately in response to the citizens' questions, agreeing with Fitzsimmons sentiment that the state and federal government should be paying for more of the budget. She said that the "miracle" is a result of imposed fees on the parents of children who attend Cohasset Public Schools. She listed off bus fees, athletic fees, pre-school and full-day kindergarten tuition, AP exams and books as just a few of the new fees that make up the offset funding.

"Parents are shouldering the burden. It's taking the public out of Cohasset Public Schools, and placing it on the parents," she said, "$1.8 million in offsets — that's the miracle, it's not through the public funding process."

No amendments to the budget were proposed. The budget was approved by the required two-thirds vote.

Saturday's quorum challenged twice

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

Two hundred and three — that was the total amount of voters checked in at Town Meeting last Saturday. That paltry number is actually generous one because Town Meeting did not see that number at the single vote hand-count or either of the two quorum challenges.

The steadfast group of dedicated citizens debated and decided on the town's business ranging from water rate increases to zoning bylaws. The 26 articles were tackled all in one day, in less than six hours time. The meeting was called to order at 9:30a.m. and adjourned at 3:20p.m.

The only hand count of the day was requested by at least seven voters at the rear of the gym after Town Moderator Dan Evans declared that the motion to increase water rates had been adopted by majority vote. The four counters mobilized and took the for-and-against votes for the article. After the votes had been tallied the water rate increase was approved in an 83-57 vote in favor.

Twice a quorum challenge was brought to the floor when it seemed that the crowd looked thin and a citizen felt that maybe the issue at hand was too important to be decided by any less voters than 100.

Evans clarified after the first quorum challenge that Town Meeting could conduct business unless a quorum is challenged. If challenged a count must be taken and if the number of voters are less than 100, the meeting must be immediately adjourned. However, if a quorum goes unquestioned, even if there are less than 100, the meeting can continue and all business is legal.

Martha Gjesteby of Old Pasture Road called for a quorum count shortly before 1p.m., as the discussion on article 14 that proposed the creation of a new zoning district was getting started. Zoning bylaw changes require a two-thirds vote.

"I think these zoning changes are too important to pass without a quorum," Gjesteby said as her explanation for the quorum challenge. Evans requested that voters who were sitting outside the gymnasium or getting something to each from the snack bar come in to be properly accounted for as voters. Voters were asked to raise their orange vote cards as the volunteer counters totaled up the participant. Evans announced the count as 109 and the meeting could be resumed.

Town Meeting continued plodding along, Evans only allowed for a short five-minute break, tackling more 12 articles. The discussion was well under way on article 26 (the last Town Meeting article) that requested a $1 million appropriation for drainage improvements that were to be done while the road is torn up during the Little Harbor, Atlantic Avenue, and Jerusalem Road sewer expansion project. Pam Miles of Linden Drive challenged the quorum at 2:45p.m.

The count was now 104 voters, just enough to keep the meeting in session. After another half hour of debate and several amendments, the article with two amendments passed with the requisite two-thirds votes.

Boathouse project stays afloat

Private use of CPC funds questioned

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

Opinions abounded on whether to allocate $50,000 of Community Preservation funds to renovate the Cohasset Maritime Institute boathouse. The discussion was the longest of any of the Community Preservation Committee's recommendations by a long shot, the other eight CPC recommendations passed unanimously with minimal discussion.

The contention was driven by one side's view that the organization that occupies the historic boathouse (owned by the town) is a private one and CPC monies should not be going toward the benefit of a private organization. The other side of the coin was the renovation would allow the structure to continue and expand its use, returning to its historical purpose.

The proposal included a historical architect, a new roof, new windows, installation of insulation and an update to the electrical system.

Selectmen and CPC member Ralph Dormitzer was the sole vote on both boards opposing this project.

"It was not a vote against the historic restoration of the building," he said. At a previous meeting he indicated that he supported the electrical and roof work, but not the insulation of the building. "It's changing or improving the function of a private organization."

"We are a relatively new organization that promotes a historic mission."
— Jack Buckley, Cohasset Maritime Institute

Russell Bonetti of Parker Ave. was the most outspoken voice against the CPC project, citing that town funds were allocated to restore the Hagerty property four or five years ago and contended that the funds were not used appropriately. He specifically mentioned as one of his major concerns the poor handicap accessibility. He also believes the life of the roof and windows have not yet reached their full life.

Jack Buckley, a CMI board member, argued the merits of the project.

"We are a relatively new organization that promotes a historic mission," the boathouse was built in 1855 as a maritime life saving outpost. The organization hopes to build small boats in the building during the off-season. He has built two dories with high school students already.

Karen Quigley of Clay Spring Road, a member of the Harbor Health Committee, spoke as a private citizen.

"The rowing club is a viable club. But, as a private citizen, I question whether we need to [renovate] the building to the extent that is proposed," she said. "It is a private club and it may be open to the public but, in my experience, they are not welcoming to the public."

Jack Creighton of Cushing Road seconded Quigley's remarks, "using public money on private endeavors is a very slippery slope. The percentage of people that are benefiting from this project is very small."

At the close of discussion, a voice vote was taken with the required two-thirds majority voting in favor of CPC project.

CPC Chairman Stuart Ivimey said that there would be "significant oversight to project" with the bids for each piece being submitted for review by the CPC and Town Manager.

From the archives of the Cohasset Historical Society

Last week the Cohasset Skippers opened their 2007 season with a decisive 8-0 victory over Sacred Heart in Kingston. Local baseballs fans hope this is only the beginning of a campaign that will result in Cohasset's first invitation to the postseason tournament in many years.

Things were not looking so bright 90 years ago when the Skippers' 1917 baseball team got off to a bit of a rocky start. The 1917 Cohasset baseball schedule is just one example of the thousands of documents, photographs and artifacts owned by the Cohasset Historical Society that bring Cohasset's history to life.

ASP JOURNAL

'This week has been really amazing'

Journal Entry June 29, 2006: "Tonight is the last night. We are on Aerobeds talking about crazy stuff; 17 of us all around the beds talking and laughing. It's for times like these that we come on ASP. Everybody is laughing. I have a feeling that I'll remember these happy moments for my whole life. This week has been really amazing. I've done a lot of thinking, and I'm sure that this experience will change me forever. At night we socialize and make lasting bonds, and during the day we make a huge difference in people's lives." — A student volunteer.

Early on the first leg of the trip down: clean, fresh and full of life.

Later that day, it's lights out.

For years Cohasset has been sending almost 200 of its children and adult volunteers to Appalachia as a part of the Cohasset Appalachia Service Project, but many of us have never really known what goes on there besides some home repair. What you just read is a glimpse into life on the trip, and the transformation that takes place in just a week's time. Each day the kids contribute to a journal to record their thoughts, on events, on the people they're helping, the tasks and themselves. Over the next few weeks you'll be able to travel along as we reprint some of those journal entries and interview some volunteers.

"ASP" is a faith-based home repair ministry, open to all people, that fosters human development. That's the stated mission. The effect is the personal transformation that occurs from the first night to the last.

On that first night, which ends a very long day of bus travel with a pre-dawn beginning, all the volunteers sit in a circle and individually state why they took part in ASP and what they hope to accomplish. The reasons for joining are usually pretty simple and straightforward: "I wanted to do something good for the poor people of Appalachia." And among 45 people the same reason can be heard multiple times. On the last night, after eight days of sweat, cold showers, sleeping in a school room with 20 others and very emotional encounters, the same questions are asked and the answers can take 10 minutes and bring all who are listening to tears.

The net result: good kids who are made even better. As the student said above, "I'm sure that this experience will change me forever."

Look for the ASP Journal each week for the next few weeks.. And make plans now to spend Saturday night, April 28 at the Appalachia County Fair at the St. Anthony Parish Center. Dinner by Redbones BBQ. Music and Dancing by The Gr8fls, Silent and Live Auction. Tickets are available through Cohasset churches, or by contacting Rev. Gary Ritts, 718 383 0345, gar@2ndcc.org

OPINION

EDITORIAL

Time for sidewalks

Improvements to Forest Avenue, one of the most beautiful streets in town, are long overdue.

While opinions differ as to whether granite-curbed sidewalks are the answer in terms of safety and aesthetics — they are clearly the best answer at this time considering timing and finances.

In other words, the residents of Forest Avenue – who cannot enjoy their street as pedestrians – have waited long enough.

At Monday's Selectmen's meeting on the issue, one mother said she could not allow her son to ride his bicycle to a neighbor's house just a few doors down. Others talked about wanting to achieve a "sense of community" on the street, something that is difficult when neighbors cannot walk along their road without fear.

Widening the road to allow for substantial distance between the fog lines and shoulder could involve land takings, an expensive and possibly litigious process. No one wants to wait more years to see Forest Avenue become a safer place for walkers, joggers and youth-bicyclists.

There was some debate Monday about the pros and cons of using the hardedge granite curbing for the sidewalk. Experts say that type of curbing serves as a traffic calming measure. And if you think about it, would you try to skirt around a vehicle in front of you that is waiting to make a left-hand turn if there was a granite curb on your right? Probably not.

How many times on the two-lane portions of 3A have you pulled over to the shoulder to go around a car or truck that is making a left-hand turn? Probably often. We know we have.

During Monday's hearing, concerns were also raised about speeding along Forest Avenue. Some suggested modified, permanent speed bumps that would be brightly painted. Others talked about stop signs, other signage and more enforcement.

As the road is improved, now is the time to look into ways to get traffic to slow down. That is clearly an issue that everyone can agree on.

Town election

While this election lacks excitement because there are no "races" between candidates and no override vote – it is refreshing in a way. Cohasset elections can be hard-fought, contentious affairs and taking a year off, in essence, allows everyone more time to regroup and reflect.

We do hope you will make the trek to the polls Saturday to vote. In addition to doing your civic duty you might also see an old friend or run into a neighbor that you have not connected with for a while. We expect the candidates will also be at the polls at some points during the day. It might be a good chance to let them know about your concerns, wish them luck, or praise them for a job well done.

Cohasset Political Forum to meet April 7

Cohasset Political Forum will host its next session Saturday, April 7, at 10 a.m., at Paul Pratt Library in Cohasset. The topic is: "US Immigration Policy & Reform," a discussion of what current US immigration policy is, its pros and cons, what immigration policy should be, what should be done with undocumented aliens already here and of the reform proposals pending in Congress. Also to be discussed is the role, if any, of state and municipal governments in enforcing immigration policy.

Guest speaker will be Gerald Rovner, a Boston immigration attorney. Other speakers may be added. After a short presentation, there will be opportunity for questions, discussion and debate. The pubic is invited to attend.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

'Last Pick' turned out to be a winner

TO THE EDITOR:

I wish to affirm what a glorious Sunday afternoon we had on April 1 to celebrate the finale of the Cohasset Library's two month long outreach program – "One Book/One Cohasset." The Friends of the Library chose "The Last Pick" as a town-wide read. Our hopes were that a town-wide reading of the same book and related activities for all our townsfolk would generate new friendships, new contacts, new ideas and bridge generation gaps. We certainly accomplished all that and much more. The themes of the book were to inspire – but many look at the book as the story of Dave McGillivray's journey – as a marathon runner and now director of the Boston Marathon. It was a good choice to end our town-wide reading endeavor with the Cohasset Road Race – everything pulled together on Sunday, including the weather.

We were so fortunate to have Dave McGillivray here on Sunday – not only to run the Cohasset Road Race course three times – but to inspire, encourage us to dream big, to set goals, make plans to achieve those goals, achieve them and then give back – and also to thank us for choosing his book for our first ever town-wide reading endeavor.

As is always the case with such huge and fun endeavors there are many people to thank for the project's success. Dave has quoted Bette Midler who apparently said "the worst part of success is trying to find someone who is happy for you." Dave's suggestion is to accept your success personally and inwardly – don't try to flaunt it – and move on to the next goal. And so, in that light, those who worked so happily and so diligently and so successfully know who you are – be happy – but a quick list must include Mary Ford, Ron and Brad, Gayle and Sharon, Betsey and Sarah et al, Sarah and Bet, Linda E. Marji M, the Yoga Ladies, all the Rotarians and The Friends' Board.

The biggest kudos must be out loud however to Linda Fechter – wife, mother, author, marathon runner, workaholic, organizer – her hundreds of hours behind the scenes have hardly gone unnoticed. Splendid job from a grateful community!

This year's book was "The Last Pick." I expect that our next pick will reach out to as many folks as this year, and hopefully more! Thank you all for participating and enjoying such a good read together!

CSCR handicap accessibility

TO THE EDITOR:

Town Meeting included discussion of the Center for Student Coastal Research (CSCR) that was, at best, hard to follow, and at worst, misleading.

CSCR is a handicap accessible facility as are the public bathrooms. Accessibility was accomplished as part of our original CPC funding along with donations and debt. The CSCR lab and computer room is accessed via a handicap lift that is operative and accessible.

Our primary concern is that anyone requiring accessibility be aware that the CSCR facility and public bathrooms accommodate that need.

We are available at your convenience to tour the facility and recommend the tour combine with a class or student activity so that you can see CSCR in action. Our telephone is 781-383-0129 and our email is cscr@verizon.net. Also, visit our website to see what our students have accomplished.

Property theft (again)

TO THE EDITOR:

I am writing this letter shortly after finding that four of our kayaks have been stolen from our back yard. A year and a half ago, a $1500 Mosquito Magnet was stolen from a spot footsteps away.

Sure, I feel extremely frustrated and violated about losing our valuable possessions. I feel worse realizing that Cohasset is not the safe and secure hamlet that it used to be.

Please take the necessary precautions to protect yourself, your loved ones and your property. At the same time, if you discover our three orange kayaks and a yellow one, please give us a call. We'll be sure to provide a reward — and a bonus if you find our Mosquito Magnet.

An extremely frustrated and disappointed,

Race support greatly appreciated

TO THE EDITOR:

The members of the Cohasset Rotary Club would like to thank all the wonderful people of the town of Cohasset for their overwhelming support of the 31st Cohasset Road Race by the Sea and the third annual Fran Coffey Memorial Fun Walk held this past weekend. We had more than 1200 runners and walkers participate in these events, and the support and help by members of the community was amazing.

From the hundreds of onlookers who cheered the runners on, the Appalachia Service Project members who handled the water stops, the Cohasset Police, the South Shore Community Center, numerous business sponsors, the "One Book One Cohasset" project members, the understanding residents who put up with the traffic disruptions, the residents along the route who played music, waved signs and offered encouragement, to one of the best groups of volunteers in the history of the race...we thank you all for your help and support.

Again this year we heard so many wonderful compliments about the Cohasset community and the exceptional volunteers, from the runners and walkers who traveled here from thru out the northeast and beyond to enjoy this beautiful area we are so blessed to live in.

The dedicated members of the Cohasset Rotary Club who strive to follow the Rotary International motto of "Service Above Self" would never be able to provide so much assistance to all our worthwhile projects, both locally and worldwide without the assistance of so many wonderful people and businesses in the community.

Thank you again for helping us to have such a successful day.

Hearing doesn't curb sidewalks

MAKING TRACKS

TOM GRUBER & MARK BRENNAN

Forest Avenue Project Update – This past Monday, the Selectmen held a continuation of the Tree Hearing for the Forest Avenue project. We heard about a lot more than trees. It was really a positive meeting with lots of ideas and thoughts being exchanged. To cut to the chase, it was the consensus of the Forest Avenue neighborhood residents to proceed with the project as designed. The Selectmen supported this. But, a number of ideas that can form the basis of small changes that might make the project better and safer were discussed. As a follow up, we plan to have a meeting between the Police Chief, the Fire Chief, DPW Director and the Town Manager to review the ideas that were brought to the floor. We have also reviewed these safety enhancements with Norfolk County Engineering. As usual, they are very open to working with the Town to find effective solutions. One of the main concerns from the neighbors was speeding on Forest Avenue. Several possible ways were discussed to slow the traffic. So, we'll let you know what comes from this follow up.

Another very interesting topic came up at the meeting. Remember, technically this was a continuation of a Shade Tree Hearing. Usually, hearings like this generate complaints about taking down too many trees. Not this meeting. Several attendees wanted to know why more trees were not being taken down. We explained that we had surveyed the area alongside Forest Avenue where the sidewalk will be placed, with a bias toward removing as few trees as possible. Although we are quite certain about our tree counts, circumstances may arise where a few more trees may need to be removed. We have planned for this contingency in our financial planning. But, after all is said and done, there may be other trees that residents may want to have removed from their land. In this case, we suggest that you contract the tree removal company, Hansen Tree Service (phone: 781-871-4111). They will be glad to give anyone a price for removal of any other trees on your property. We suspect, but can't guarantee, that their prices will be good because they will already be mobilized in your area.

Greenbush – Work has begun at Spring and Pond streets once again. Workers have left their winter hibernation and are once more on the job moving dirt and grading the road in preparation for paving. We are trying to get schedule information to pass on, but we have nothing so far. As soon as we have more information we'll pass it on to you.

We met with the CBB superintendent this week who is responsible for the crossing construction at Sohier Street. CBB will be cold planning Sohier Street at the crossing in preparation for paving. To do this they will need to close the street. We do not have a fix as to when or how long the closure will take. But, we want to let you know what's in the planning stages.

Harbor Wall Project – The Harbor Wall Project continues at a good pace. The contractor has been very cooperative, especially with the needs of the Lightkeepers and the Cohasset Sailing Club, since he is using space on Government Island as a staging area. Recently we had a complaint from a neighbor about the pumps on Border Street that run 24/7. First, let's explain why the pumps are there. The Portadam wall that keeps the seawater from the work area cannot keep 100 percent of the seawater out. Water seeps through the foundation of the Mill River Marina building and from under the parking lot of Atlantica. So the pumps are necessary to keep the seepage in check. They are a bit noisy, especially in the quiet of the night. One of the pumps already has a sound deadening treatment. But the other does not. So, the contractor has ordered a sound reduction kit for the other pump and will have it installed as soon as possible. That should quiet things a bit.

The photo shows another interesting aspect of this project. There is a line of power poles along Border Street adjacent to the seawall. These poles support all of the power and communication lines in this area. When the contractor does the digging necessary to replace the sea wall, the poles will become completely destabilized. As Martha Stewart might say, "That is not a good thing." So, to avoid loosing all power and communications and keep the area safe, the contractor has National Grid come with a truck just to hold and stabilize the poles during excavation. If you look carefully at the photo you can see an arm from the white truck gripping and holding the pole while all of the dirt is removed from around the pole. This truck will be there until the pole can stand by itself.

Listening to the cries of the earth

TOWARDS A SUSTAINABLE COHASSET

JOANN MIRISE

What a good day it was in Cohasset last Sunday. I spent the morning admiring our town while on the Fran Coffey Memorial Walk. The light reflecting from the ocean and ledge created a warm glow along the coast. The crocuses and daffodils were peeking out from thawed ground. The Village was lively and vibrant with people coming from church service, picking up their baguettes from French Memories and getting ready for the Road Race By the Sea. A day of nature and community. I felt such gratitude for my life here.

If only all of our days could be as joyful. I was 15at the time a friend in my hometown was diagnosed with a rare cancer —another victim of a suspected cluster case of cancers linked to toxic waste from a local utility. I was 26 at the time I first saw a landfill. I was stunned by the mountains of trash piled as far as the eye could see — the vomit of our over-consumption. I am now in my 30s at a time that ill-informed policy and questionable leadership on a local, national and global level threaten our societal well-being. Take Article 15 from the town warrant, for example. The smart growth movement that encourages people to move back into town centers for a better quality of daily life and less dependence on cars is being adopted worldwide. Yet in our town, some leaders are trying to create new hurdles against this progress towards sustainability. At best, on the days that I let it all get to me, I am snippity and judgmental ("What are these people thinking? Have they been living under a rock?"). At worst, I am checked-out, unable to face the painful reminders that we are continually and irrevocably destroying our earth.

With our lightening fast pace of life, we can barely hear our personal cries let alone those of our world.

When a student asked the Vietnamese Zen poet, Thich Nhat Hanh. "What do we need to do to save our world?" the student was expecting to get an answer, which addressed some strategies for social and environmental action. Thich Nhat Hanh however answered" "What we need to do is hear within us the sound of the earth crying."

With our lightening fast pace of life, we can barely hear our personal cries let alone those of our world. It seems as if when we do open up to the possibility of listening to our hearts, we reach for a pacifier of some sort because what we hear is oftentimes too painful to bear. But have you ever thought what could be lying on the other side of that pain?

Recently, I took a yoga/meditation workshop. I do yoga and have for years. But I don't do meditation. I have tried many times, but have always given up after a few minutes. I was just too fidgety, too twitchy and my foot always fell asleep no matter which position I tried. Signing up for a three-hour workshop was against my better judgment, but since I really liked the teacher, I decided to give it a go. The first meditation was 10 minutes. As predicated, I fidgeted and my foot fell asleep. The yoga practice that followed was a relief. But then the dreaded part two of the meditation came around and the instructor asked us to sit for 20 minutes this time. He urged us to work through any discomforts that came up and to be impeccably still. And then he looked straight at me and said (slightly indignant for a teacher of meditation, I thought) "I've never heard of anyone dying from a foot that fell asleep." Yikes. The pressure was on. I had to stay still. Of course, my foot fell asleep about five minutes in and by seven minutes I was in agony. This time, however, I really tried to do what my teacher said — let the pain and thoughts come and go without judgment. And wouldn't you know it, 20 minutes had passed and I hadn't moved a bit! I had come out of the pain more comfortable, clear, and connected. And I proved to myself that I could pass through the excuses, denial and judgments because they are really just figments of thought, based nowhere in reality.

In my quest to do my part, I am finding that it is a combination of the gratitude from the good and the pain from the bad that keeps my senses heightened enough to hear what the earth needs. This task is made a little easier since the earth is screaming to us with her warnings: rivers drying up, species ceasing to exist, epidemics killing, and weather patterns becoming more intense and erratic. But between the screams she is giving us the answers to repair and prevent further damage. We just have to listen. And act.

Owning pets can be healthy

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Health Notes has decided that rather than describe a litany of diseases, their effect on the populace, remedies and possible complications, maybe you deserve something else. Like what really helps you to feel better. How about owning pets? Other things do it, but dogs can really raise the plateau of life for some. Even the snarley ones. If you think about it, there are people like that. But with a dog in a bad temper, you immediately ascribe it to something someone's done to him. In other words, it's probably not his fault. Would that we could be that indulgent with our neighbors and those we see in line at the supermarket.

According to a study reported in the BBC, children who have pet animals at home have stronger immune systems and are less likely to take days off school sick. The study suggests that having a cat or dog exposed children to more infections early in life. The report says that in children aged between five and eight years, exposure boosted their immune systems in the medium term and meant these children attended school more often, on average, than pupils who did not have pets.

Tests of 138 children for the antibody immunoglobulin A (IgA), an indicator of immune system strength, showed that antibody levels among pet owning children were significantly more stable, indicating that they had robust immune systems. They were found to have an extra nine days at school over the course of the year compared to those without animals. Nothing about the animals and homework.

According to the researchers, the findings appear to support the so-called "dirty hypothesis": too much cleanliness early in life can leave the immune system weakened later on, a hypothesis that has been linked to soaring rates of childhood asthma in recent years.

However, the authors warned that pets can also pose health risks to children. A big risk for dogs not well cared for is roundworm, Toxicara canis, which infects dogs and can cause anything from stomach ache to eye damage. Moreover Warwick University in the UK found that despite these dangers three out of 10 children admitted sharing food with their pets while 21 percent let their pets lick their fingers.

But wait. A team of asthma and allergy experts America looked at more than 200 children's immune response to cat and mite allergens and found that children who live with cats can develop an immune response that prevents them developing asthma. Apparently, some children developed a tolerance protecting them against cat allergies, because of a particular type of antibody they developed. But the finding does not apply to everyone.

Professor Thomas Platts-Mills, who led the research carried out at the University of Virginia Asthma and Allergic Disease Center, has said that children were just as likely to have immunity to cats as to be allergic to them. And he said this particular type of immunity developed when children had a significant amount of exposure to cats. "If the child goes away to college and has less exposure, they may become allergic again. "We think children are more likely to become allergic if everyone else has got cats and they have not." He said children who were allergic to cats are more likely to develop asthma, while those who had this particular immune response were not.

A spokesperson for the Cats Protection League welcomed the research, and said; "Many people give up their cats or feel they can't have a cat because of their children's asthma."

The moral is contained in Arthur Guiterman's modified 1871 poem:

The Antiseptic Baby and the Prophylactic Pup
The antiseptic baby and the prophylactic pup
Were playing in the garden when the kitten gamboled up
They looked upon this creature with loathing undisguised
He wasn't disinfected and he wasn't sterilized

They said he was a microbe and a hotbed of disease
They steamed him in a vapor of a thousand odd degrees
They froze him in a freezer as cold as banished hope
And washed him in permanganate with carbolated soap

Into sulphurated hydrogen they steeped his tiny ears
And trimmed his frisky whiskers with a pair of hardboiled shears
Then they donned their rubber mittens and took him by the hand
And elected him a member of the fumigated band

There's not a micrococcus in the garden where they play
And they bathe in pure iodoform a dozen times a day
And each imbibes his rations from a hygienic cup
The kitten and the baby and the prophylactic pup.

Fans pick the winner

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

Fifty years ago, when baseball fans were given unfettered access to the All-Star ballot box, fans of the Cincinnati Reds voted so early and often that seven of eight members of their team were chosen to start the game.

That was too much for then-Commissioner Ford Frick, who took it upon himself to replace the immortal Gus Bell and Wally Post with Willie Mays and Hank Aaron. It also ended fan participation in the All-Star voting for another 13 years.

The thought occurred to me last week that the Fox Channel is facing a similar situation in dealing with young Sanjaya Malakar.

Sanjaya, in case you're one of the dozen or so Americans who haven't been following the big story of 2007, is the 17-year-old "singer" from Seattle who has turned the erstwhile talent show "American Idol" into a popularity contest.

He apparently has parlayed a splendid mouthful of teeth, a series of breathtaking hairstyles, and a posse of teen-aged girls with cell phones...

Now I'm not much of a singer myself, although I used to do a mean version of "Drunken Bill" at closing time, so I disqualify myself as a judge, but friends who can tell a high C from a blood-curdling scream tell me that Sanjaya can't sing a lick.

He apparently has parlayed a splendid mouthful of teeth, a series of breathtaking hairstyles, and a posse of teen-aged girls with cell phones who have figured out how to use the redial function into a spot in the top 10 of "American Idol" finalists.

Last week, for instance, Sanjaya appeared in what someone described as a "fauxhawk," that is, a Mohawk hairdo with a half dozen ponytails sticking up. The week before, he had to go down into the audience to comfort a crying 12-year-old fan.

Oh, yes. He sang, too. I think.

To make matters worse, Sanjaya's fans are being egged on by Howard Stern, once the bad boy of broadcast radio and now the bad boy of satellite radio, and the kid even has a Web site, www.votefortheworst.com, behind him.

"Sanjaya winning would be the end of the world as we know it," says Joe Jackson of Atlanta, obviously a fan of the show, but not Sanjaya. "Some things are just too important and dear to our hearts to be desecrated like that."

Catherine Schloss of Folsom, Calif., told USA Today that she feels a Sanjaya victory "will ruin the show. If he wins, I really don't think 'American Idol' will be back."

"Sanjaya has an X-factor that has nothing to do with his singing," says Mahesh Grossman of Soquel, Calif. "You can help but love the way he glows."

"I have a 13-year-old daughter who after the show races to the safety of the closet to vote for 'he's soooo cute' after every horrid performance," says Dan Lyda of Wichita, Kansas.

"Cell phones are to blame — and to slow, fat parents like myself who can't seem to stop the downfall of a once-enjoyable show."

And so far, no Ford Frick is in sight to replace Wally Post with Hank Aaron.

Commission Nathaniel Palmer provided a brief overview of the rate increase and the reasoning behind it. He told voters that typical household water bills would increase from about $30 per quarter, averaging about $9-$10 per month. Higher water users, those buildings that use more than 2,000 cubic feet of water per quarter, would increase more than 40 percent — from an average bill of $738 to $1032. Large buildings like Stop & Shop and the schools would fall into this category.

The water rate increase includes the $150,000 hydrant fees that were previously in the Town's budget. However, in recent years, the full amount has not been fully paid to the Water Commission.

"This is not a spending article or an article that justifies new spending," Palmer explained that this increase is to pay for previous Town Meeting approved articles and will bring a better treatment system to Cohasset water users.

"We don't like charging more any more than you like paying it," he said noting that increased federal regulation on the drinking water quality has necessitated the improvements to the Lily Pond plant and water mains.

Several residents spoke up against the transfer of the hydrant fees to the water users. All of Cohasset is not on Cohasset Water, Hingham-based Aquarion Water serves North Cohasset and many households are on well water. However, all of the hydrants that serve municipal buildings are.

"I'm in support of the water department and what they're trying to do, I support water rate increase but not the transfer of hydrant fees from tax payer to rate payer," said Ron Goodwin of Sohier Street, a former water commissioner.

Water quality

The debate then switched to a discussion of the poor quality drinking water and how many Cohasset residents won't drink the water, instead buying bottled water.

"If we all drank our water instead of buying it, we might make up the increase in water rates," said Mike Doherty of Ash Street. Another resident said that in addition to saving money, the plastic bottles create trash and encouraged the Water Commission to strive to make tastier water.

Palmer indicated that the spending would fix the current problems in the treatment process and improve both water quality and pressure.

"You will begin to see real improvement in quality of water in the next two years, between 2007 and 2009," said Palmer.

Tom Gruber of Pratt Court raised the point that in "one fell swoop" the town authorized $21 million of borrowing for the Water Commission back in 2004, "by giving them the right to spend, we will now have to pay for it."

Selectman Gary Vanderweil seconded Gruber's sentiment, "to turn down rate increases would not be a good idea, and the increases are validated because the costs were already approved."

He suggested that the Water Commission could change the future by stretching out land acquisition and infrastructure improvements for the remaining half of the $21 million. He said that approximately 60 percent of the water will go toward bonds and nothing can be done about money that's already been bonded.

Selectman Rob Spofford told Town Meeting that if these rate increases were voted down the budget that was just approved would then be thrown off balance "and we will be back in front of you in the fall asking for a rate increase."

Palmer indicated that the key to stave off future water increases would tie into the ability for the Water Commission to sell the surplus of water.

The motion came to a vote and Moderator Dan Evans ruled that the majority adopted the motion. However, at least seven people in the back of the room contested that ruling and called for a hand count.

The vote was 83-57 in favor of the motion.

Other Water Commission Articles

- Article 5, Water Contract Operations – adopted unanimously to allow the Water Commission to continue contract operations without having to re-bid every three years.
- Article 16, Amend Water Resource District Bylaw – indefinitely postponed
- Article 17 & 18, Sale of Water – adopted with an amendment that allows the Water Commission to begin contract negotiations with other cities, towns or water departments but the proposed contract must be approved at Town Meeting.
- Article 19, Land Acquisition – adopted by required 2/3 vote to allow the Water Commission to purchase a parcel of land in the Lily Pond watershed for approximately $75,000.

Despite no contests, candidates poised for action for at least part of the day. He's ordered a banner that he will put on his car with the phrase "Thank you for your support, Ralph Dormitzer, Selectman."

Adrienne MacCarthy intends to answer questions, discuss concerns and be available to voters at the polls. This year, she decided from the time she pulled papers that she would not run a fundraising driven campaign.

"If people wanted to donate funds to my campaign, I told them to write a check for the PSO or Cohasset Education Foundation. That way the funds will live on and affect the schools," she said in an interview on Monday.

"I think [residents] have seen my consistent behavior on the School Committee. So, if people want me to continue to serve them, then they will give me their vote."

Both Dormitzer and MacCarthy say that the biggest part of their campaign has been to continue their respective position's duties.

Both incumbent candidates are ready to tackle the next three years of issues and continue to work toward specific goals.

Dormitzer names the repairing of the town's infrastructure — and how to pay for it — as one of the key matters that will need to be addressed in the coming years. Roads, culverts, buildings are deteriorating and will need to replaced or fixed. With a strapped budget paying for these projects will prove to be a challenge.

Another priority is to work with members of the School Committee to achieve their goals. The likelihood of getting by another year without an override or significant budget changes is remote.

"It will be more difficult next year than it was this year to get by without an override. This issue will be discussed fairly extensively in the preparation of fiscal year 2009 budget," said Dormitzer.

Dormitzer also supports the financial goals advocated by Town Manager Bill Griffin in the areas of debt service and use of free cash, "it's dull stuff but it's at the core of keeping the town in good fiscal stature."

Lastly, Dormitzer hopes that the trend of harmony within and among the town boards will continue.

MacCarthy, current Chairman of the School Committee, has a host of goals that she would like to accomplish; chief among them is finding a way to properly fund the schools. MacCarthy says that she'd like to see town leaders recognize that the school budget requires a six to seven percent increase every year, "that is cast in stone."

"We need to plan – as a town that values education – how we are going to accomplish it," she says, "we need town support to do it."

MacCarthy cites the gradual decrease in state and federal funding has left the burden of public schools on the property taxpayers. She will join other suburban school that have experienced drops in state funding at "Stand for Children" rally on Boston Common April 25.

The maintenance of schools and all town facilities also tops her agenda. She'd like to see a policy put in place to recognize, plan and pay for the upkeep of our schools in the coming years.

Newcomers to the Cohasset political scene, Paul Carlson and Peter Richardsson, will bring new perspective and knowledge to the two boards.

"I hope to be a moderating voice," said Carlson, who also plans to utilize his professional and education background to steer the town in the right direction.

Carlson worked in the investment management field for over 30 years and then for 10 years he worked with the former Soviet Union states to establish a viable economy and financial system. He's now fully retired and feels he has the time needed to be a selectman.

Over the next three years he thinks that the big issues will center on affordable housing, outstanding debt, sewers, school budget and unanticipated issues with train.

"I'd like to see the town on solid financial footing, get taxes under control and establish affordable housing options so our longtime neighbors can remain in town," he said in an interview this week.

Richardsson has two young sons, one of which has begun the integrated pre-school program at Osgood. He said his satisfaction with the program propelled him to want to get involved with the School Committee.

"We've become committed to the public school system," he said, "I'm prepared to hit the ground running."

Richardsson, who had a member of the Economic Development Committee since 2005, hopes to help the schools achieve their "lofty goal" of a top 10 school district in the state. He plans to bring a "sense of unity" to the committee.

"They have charted an ambitious course with so many great ideas," he said, "we'll have to get our oars in the water and rowing hard toward the goal."

He said all five members of the board, and the support of the town, will be needed to achieve the goals of School Committee.

Both Richardsson and Carlson will also be at the polls on Saturday to answer voter questions and address their concerns of the next three years. Carlson hopes that there will be a substantial turnout at the polls.

"It's a civic responsibility. We're fortunate to have the right to vote," says Carlson, who plans to contact his supporters to ensure they make their way to the Town Hall.

"It will reflect well on town if a good amount of citizens turn out to vote."

Here are the other unopposed candidates who were not mentioned above: James Richardson, Lillian Curley, and Daniel J. Martin (Recreation Commission, 3 seats); Stacey Weaver, Sarah Pease and Barbara Power (Board of Library Trustees, 3 seats); Elsa Miller (Board of Assessors); Ralph Perroncello (Housing Authority); Steve Bobo (Board of Health); Al Moore (Planning Board); and Sean Cunning (Sewer Commission).

Polls will be open from 8a.m. to 6p.m. at the Town Hall Auditorium.

New Handicapped Voting Machine

The state has provided a new machine designed to aid the visually or hearing impaired or those that have a disability. The AutoMARK Voter Assist Terminal is used to mark the ballot selections. A voter can mark the ballot by using the touch screen or the Braille keypad. Audio volume can be increased or decreased as desired, and the screen can be turned on and off for privacy. Voters can use the audio system to listen to ballot choices and instructions. Audio keys on the keypad control audio sound and headphones are also available. A zoom mode feature enlarges text on the screen, and a high contrast mode gives contrast to the screen resolution for those who are visually impaired. Voters desiring to use this machine will still need to check-in and check-out at the precinct tables. Any voter is welcome to use this machine.

BRIEFLY

Town officials honored

Town Meeting voted to honor four town officials with proclamations for their dedication and service to the Town and its citizens. All commendations were adopted unanimously by Town Meeting.

Former Fire Chief Roger Lincoln, who served on the Cohasset Fire Department for more than 30 years, retired in October 2006.

Selectman Rob Spofford who will complete his three-year term this week was given a proclamation for both his work as Selectman and the School Building Committee. He has served the town in some capacity for the past nine years.

Advisory Committee member, Donna McGee, was recognized by Town Meeting for her service to the Town. She completes two terms as an Advisory Committee member next week, the maximum allowed.

Lastly, the Town acknowledged School Committee member Jamie Williams for her three years sitting on the School Committee. She helped to implement the school's five-year plan and served one year as Chairman.

Before town meeting business began, a moment of silence was requested by Moderator Dan Evans to remember those who have served the town and passed away the previous year.

Spofford thanked with a poem

At the start of last week's Board of Selectmen meeting (March 26), Selectman Rob Spofford announced that it would be his last Selectmen's meeting. Spofford decided not to seek re-election after one three-year term. Chairman Ralph Dormitzer wrote a poem in the exiting selectmen's honor. With his permission, we have reprinted it here.

Elected selectman in a competitive race/Pleased he was to be in first place/His three year term saw great tumult/Yet concluded with proud result/Among us he is quite outspoken/With lengthy dissertations unbroken/Whether in the minority or majority/He was always faithful to his priority/Of the school facilities he was most proud/On time, on budget he allowed/For our meetings he did his homework/Never from controversy did he shirk/His cogent comments we will miss/And good memories of his term will long persist

The poem received a round of applause and heartfelt thanks from Spofford.

Jamie Williams thanked for her service

School Committee member Jamie Williams attended her last meeting as a sitting board member on Wednesday night. The committee and Superintendent jointly thanked Williams for her hard work the last three years. Chairman Adrienne MacCarthy read the proclamation recognizing her service that was accepted at Town Meeting.

"I hope everyone who voted for me three years ago is happy with my performance. I wish the board luck to continue on the march," she said.

Rick Flynn attested that Williams leaves the Committee a better board and the district a better school system.

During her three-year term Williams wore many hats, including serving as School Committee Chairman, and helped implement a five-year plan.

Out-of-district transportation agreement

The School Committee has tentatively entered into an agreement with a new network that will provide transportation to out of district special education students – and potential transportation savings. The Southeast Transportation Network is a designated program of the North River Collaborative. The Network will serve participating school district and transport students to their out of district schools. By regionalizing transportation, the Network will have cost sharing and lead to cost savings in each district.

Currently, the Network is posed to transport to 10 specialized schools, none of which Cohasset student presently attend. Superintendent Walsh said that this could change in the coming year and indicated that if there was a student or if the network expanded, there could be significant cost savings.

Member Alfred Slanetz asked what would be an estimate of the cost savings and if there was a downside to the program. School business manager Dave DeGennaro said that the downside could be the length of time a student is on the bus. He said that the Network plans to keep the transit time less than one hour. There is also an opt out, if the district determined a better way to transport a specific child to school.

A yearly start-up assessment equal to 10 percent of the projected annual transportation cost will be billed to each district in July and will be offset against the fourth quarter invoice.

"We're in a good place right now because we don't have any students so we can see how [the Network] works," said DeGennaro.

The School Committee voted to join the Network if it was possible just to sign a contract for one year, the contract as written is binding for three years. The School Committee would like to reassess the Network after a year. Dr. Walsh will investigate this possibility and report back at the next School Committee meeting, April 25.

Paul Carlson

NAME: Paul Carlson
AGE: 65
ADDRESS: 18 Old Coach Road
FAMILY: Wife, 2 grown sons, 2 daughters in law, 3 granddaughters, 1 grandson
YEARS IN TOWN; 34
EDUCATION: BA Lehigh University, MBA Columbia University Graduate School of Business
OCCUPATION: Investments, Developmental Consulting
CIVIC/MUNICIPAL EXPERIENCE: Coaching for the Recreation Commission programs, Rear Commodore Fleet for the Sailing Club, Technology Action Planning Committee, Cable Advisory Committee.
WHAT IS THE QUALITY YOU MOST ADMIRE IN OTHERS: Integrity.
WHAT CAN YOU LAUGH AT MOST ABOUT YOURSELF: My deep and abiding interest in food.
WHAT HAVE VOTERS TOLD YOU IS THEIR BIGGEST CONCERN: Fiscal responsibility.

REASON FOR SEEKING OFFICE: My overriding goal is to improve our quality of life here in Cohasset while keeping the town affordable for all our friends and neighbors. That is a formidable challenge for any community and challenges energize me. I am eager to work for the benefit of the town as so many other people have done over the years. Specifically, I believe we need to

- practice fiscal responsibility by controlling expenditure growth and avoiding divisive override elections,
- reduce our large debt load – highest per capita in the commonwealth, and
- provide quality town services effectively and efficiently.

The skills developed during my career such as gathering information efficiently and diplomatically, asking the tough questions, defining problems and seeking solutions and opportunities enabled me to quickly gain the trust and confidence of my new colleagues when I worked in developing countries. These skills are also directly applicable to the work of the selectmen. My experiences working with Recreation Commission programs, the Sailing Club, the schools Technology Action Planning Committee and the Cable Advisory Committee as well as what I have learned during 34 years living in Cohasset will also support and inform my service on the Board of Selectman.

Adrienne M. MacCarthy

NAME: Adrienne M. MacCarthy
AGE: 44
ADDRESS: 85 Doane St.
FAMILY: Husband, John. Sons: Eric (17) Sean (14) and Ryan (12)
YEARS IN TOWN: 13
EDUCATION: Milton High School; Aquinas Jr. College; Wentworth Institute of Technology
OCCUPATION: Domestic Engineer
CIVIC/MUNICIPAL EXPERIENCE: 3 years School Committee, 8 yrs on the Building/ Facilities Committee, Past President of the Cohasset PSO, Founder and Fundraiser of the Friends Of the Cohasset Public School Playgrounds which built both the Osgood and Deer Hill Playgrounds
WHAT IS THE QUALITY YOU MOST ADMIRE IN OTHERS: Honesty
WHAT CAN YOU LAUGH AT MOST ABOUT YOURSELF: That I want to sit on the School Committee for another three years!
WHAT HAVE VOTERS TOLD YOU IS THEIR BIGGEST CONCERN: Voters are concerned for the future of our public schools. They know that without an adequate and predictable operating budget each year our strong academic footing will slip away. Voters are equally concerned about not having an adequate maintenance budget within the town's operating budget. They don't want a repeat of past building maintenance practices.
REASON FOR SEEKING OFFICE: My husband and I moved to Cohasset in 1994, not for the beauty of our Historic Town Common, beaches or harbor; we chose Cohasset for the proven commitment by the town to have an outstanding public school system. The Common, beaches, and harbor were all icing on the cake. I would like to see a renewed commitment in our public schools. We have, as a town, committed to the renewal of the facilities and our students benefit from this commitment everyday; I thank you for this commitment. As I look to the next year, I see us at a pivotal point; how are we, as a town, Are going to fund our public school operating budget? Is "excellence" from our public schools a priority? How are we going to properly maintain our facilities? These are just a few of the tough questions that must be address as we start preparing for next years budget and I would like to be involved in those discussions.

Peter Richardsson

NAME: Peter Richardsson
AGE: 44
ADDRESS: 498 North Main St.
FAMILY: Wife, Kate. Two children, Henri 4 and Ted almost 2
YEARS IN TOWN: 3 years
EDUCATION: BS: Economics/Marketing, University of Maine; Master of Wine, Boston University
OCCUPATION: Small Business Owner
CIVIC/MUNICIPAL EXPERIENCE: The Town of Wilton, Downtown Revitalization Committee, 1987-1990; The Deck House School, Member of the Board of Trustees, 1986-2002; The Deck House School, President of the Alumni Association, 1982-2002; The Town of Cohasset, Economic Development Committee, 2005-2007; The Hull Yacht Club, Secretary, 2002-Pres. Sail Nantasket, Development Committee Chairman, 2004-Pres.; Wellspring Volunteer; King's Academy, Madaba-Manja, Jordan, Honorary Alumnus
WHAT IS THE QUALITY YOU MOST ADMIRE IN OTHERS: Intelligence, creativity, and humor.
WHAT CAN YOU LAUGH AT MOST ABOUT YOURSELF: Everything!

WHAT HAVE VOTERS TOLD YOU IS THEIR BIGGEST CONCERN: SCHOOL FUNDING! Some believe the schools are under funded, especially in light of the high goals that most residents expect the schools to achieve. Others feel the schools spend too much money with little accountability and diminishing results.
REASON FOR SEEKING OFFICE: I am running for the school committee for two reasons. Firstly, I am a committed parent of two school age children. My wife and I have been very impressed with our experience at the Osgood School and feel passionate about the Cohasset school system. I hope to do my part to both help the school reach some lofty goals and ensure that the community has a top-notch educational resource for years to come. Owning a small business has also taught me the value of a good education; and the value of a dollar. Serving on the town's Economic Development Committee has given me great insight into the town's current financial situation. As a member of the school committee I would like to make the most out of the educational resources currently allotted, use transparent, goals based budgeting to identify any potential savings, leverage technology and best practices to manage the school's exposure to rising costs, and to identify strengths in the system that might be parlayed into revenue generating programs. I really hope to set the school system on a financial footing that makes it less dependant on the heavily burdened taxpayers to maintain a high quality program.

RTF will be closed on Easter Sunday

Carl A. Sestito, Superintendent of the Cohasset DPW announces that the Recycling Transfer Facility will be closed Sunday, April 8 in observance of the Easter Holiday. It will reopen Wednesday, April 11.

In addition, winter wreaths and baskets must be removed from all town owned cemeteries by Sunday, April 15.

Stars bring back the gold from Montreal

Every hockey purist knows the genesis of the sport began in the province of Quebec.

The Coastal Stars Squirt "Dream Team" – led by a hockey legend known in these circles as "Coach Joe" and guided by the Stars Ambassador Gary "Maple Leaf" Scullion, Coach Paul, Coach Rob, Coach Bill and John the bus driver – boarded the bus on a grey Thursday afternoon and took off for a tournament in Montreal.

The opening tilt pitted the Stars against a feisty Westchester, NY squad. This contest proved to be a barn-burner as the score ping-ponged throughout the contest with the Stars prevailing, 4–3, powered by two goals from Brian Bowman, one by JoJo Carbone and a game-winner by Brendan Evitts.

Game two was a cakewalk where everyone padded their stats against an overwhelmed Schenectady, NY squad – the final was 12–0 and Hugh Healy notched another shutout, his 14th of the season.

Game three required reinforcements - arriving on the Air Canada red-eye was Kal Maier to round out the defensive core. Down early (2-0) to undefeated Brossard Dynamo's from Quebec, the Stars dug deep and did a gut check – then potted two shorthanded goals by Carbone and Zack Sullivan within 30 seconds (a new tournament record) to knot the score.

Matt Doyle then put the Stars up by one with a rocket to the top corner. A relentless Quebec squad roofed one with 1:20 to go to earn the tie. When the buzzer sounded the contest was knotted at 3 – and the stage was set for the 2007 version of the Canadian Cup.

As the team entered the arena with the Canadian National anthem reverberating in the forum halls, the Stars countered with a heartfelt chant of "USA, USA" and the table was set for a "Battle Royale."

The fans were not even in their seats when the Stars found themselves down 1–0, and the hole got deeper as the first period ended with the Stars down 2–0. This woke up the sleeping giant, as the boys hankered back to a pregame speech from the legend Giles Gilbert – hold onto your pomme frittes, the Stars were out for revenge!

Joey "Hammertime" Redfearn lit the lamp early in the second and the momentum shifted. After a feeding frenzy in front of the Habs' net, Carbone scored to tie the game, but the Habs would not go away quietly and responded with the go-ahead goal within minutes.

With the tension mounting, the Stars responded with the tenacious fore-checking of Paul Parker, Mats Nelson and Michael Lund. Parker, Nelson and Lund played textbook two way hockey for the entire tournament.

It was the back-checking efforts of Matthew Scullion (look up "back checking" in the dictionary and you'll see a picture of Matt Scullion) that set up the third goal on a laser from Sullivan, and at the end of the second, the score was deadlocked at –3.

Doyle then took matters into his own hands, burying two back-to-back goals to give the Stars a two goal cushion, but the Habs pulled their goaltender and buried one with 34 seconds left to narrow the margin to one, 5–4. With Redfearn in the sin bin, his leadership was omnipresent as his teammates stifled the Habs and the cup cleared customs on the way back to the USA

Skippers to sail with experience

By Eric MacCarthy
CORRESPONDENT

The Cohasset High baseball team opened its season last Friday with a dominating 8-0 victory in Kingston over Sacred Heart.

Although a non-league game, Cohasset showed that it is ready to compete in the challenging South Shore League.

The Skippers came out swinging in their first game of the season, as they piled up 10 hits. Starting for the Skippers was junior ace Brian Hill. Hill went five shutout innings, stacking up nine strikeouts, giving up only two hits and a walk.

Closing out the game in the final two innings was fellow junior Dave Snowdale, who had no walks, gave up only one hit, and struck out four of the six batters he faced.

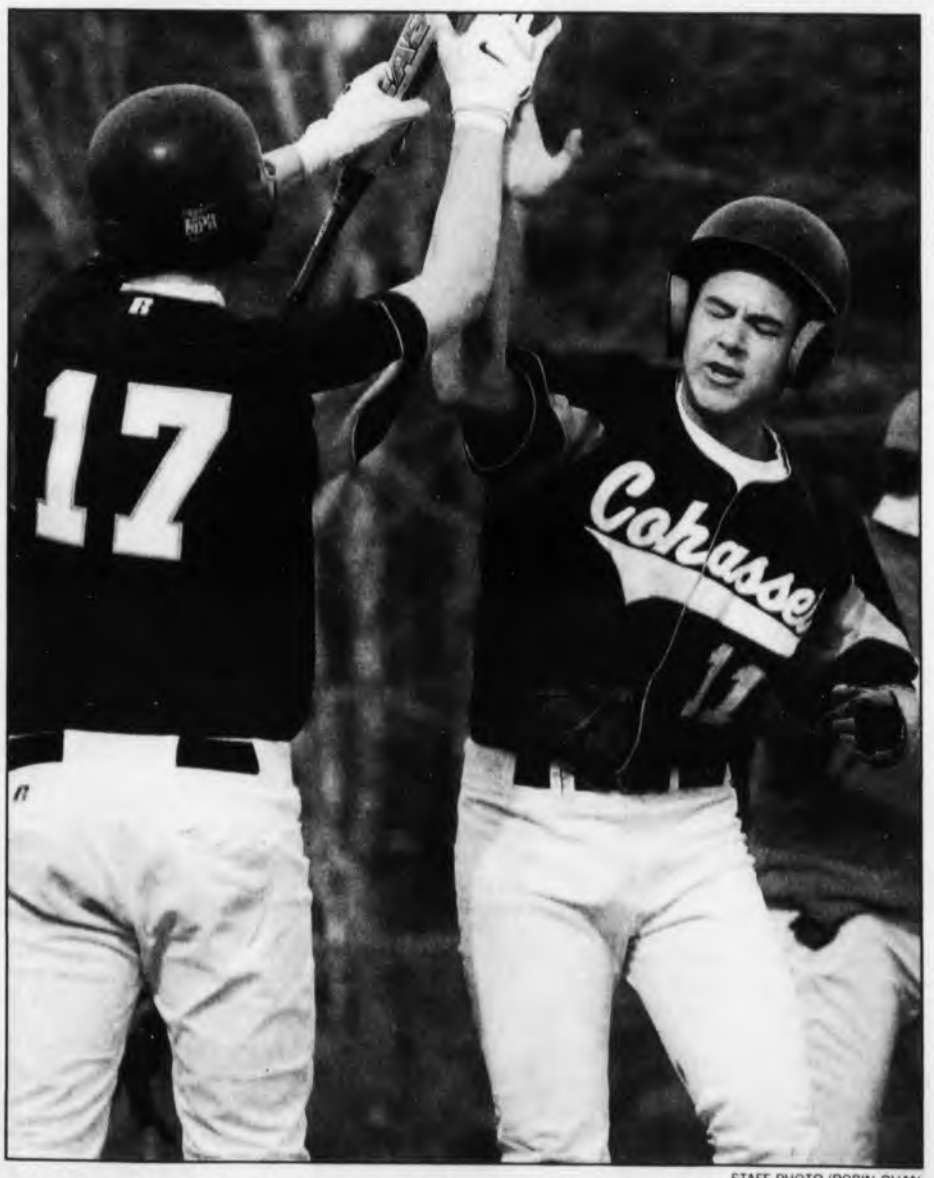
"It was pleasing to see Snowdale throw as well as he did," said head coach Al Gallotta, "He threw a lot harder than he did last year."

With a total of 13 combined strikeouts for Hill and Snowdale, Cohasset's defense had little to worry about in the field. That helped the team play error-free baseball, something Gallotta will hope to see more of.

"The fact that we played errorless was encouraging," he said. "[Defense] was our one true weak spot last year."

Not only did Cohasset's pitching and defense play spectacular, but Cohasset's offense really put the game away early. In the first inning, Cohasset scored two runs and added another six in the second, to account for all the scoring for the game.

The leading hitter was junior Kenny Muir, who was the only player to get two hits. Muir also drove in three runs for the Skippers. Senior Corbin Faber had a hit and an RBI. Alex Goetz, another junior, also had an RBI on a sacrifice fly, but also had the only extra base hit in the game with an early double.



The Skippers will need to take this win and run with it as they look to improve on last season.

"I hope to improve on last year with a good chunk of our core returning," said Gallotta.

He will have 10 returning varsity players from last year, including four seniors: Fletcher Smalzel, Faber, John Harrington and Nick Zappolo. Gallotta also has four players from junior varsity last year. Senior Austin Lanzillotti will be prevented from playing for the team this year due to a back injury.

The hardest job this year for Gallota will be dealing with the amount of depth he has and trying to get everyone playing

Nick Zappolo (11) gets a high five from teammate Kenny Muir (17) after scoring on a passed ball in the first inning of last Friday's season opener against Sacred Heart. Zappolo's run would be the first in Cohasset's 8-0 win.

Stars bring back the gold from Montreal

Every hockey purist knows the genesis of the sport began in the province of Quebec.

The Coastal Stars Squirt "Dream Team" – led by a hockey legend known in these circles as "Coach Joe" and guided by the Stars Ambassador Gary "Maple Leaf" Scullion, Coach Paul, Coach Rob, Coach Bill and John the bus driver – boarded the bus on a grey Thursday afternoon and took off for a tournament in Montreal.

The opening tilt pitted the Stars against a feisty Westchester, NY squad. This contest proved to be a barn-burner as the score ping-ponged throughout the contest with the Stars prevailing, 4–3, powered by two goals from Brian Bowman, one by JoJo Carbone and a game-winner by Brendan Evitts.

Game two was a cakewalk where everyone padded their stats against an overwhelmed Schenectady, NY squad – the final was 12–0 and Hugh Healy notched another shutout, his 14th of the season.

Game three required reinforcements - arriving on the Air Canada red-eye was Kal Maier to round out the defensive core. Down early (2-0) to undefeated Brossard Dynamo's from Quebec, the Stars dug deep and did a gut check – then potted two shorthanded goals by Carbone and Zack Sullivan within 30 seconds (a new tournament record) to knot the score.

Matt Doyle then put the Stars up by one with a rocket to the top corner. A relentless Quebec squad roofed one with 1:20 to go to earn the tie. When the buzzer sounded the contest was knotted at 3 – and the stage was set for the 2007 version of the Canadian Cup.

As the team entered the arena with the Canadian National anthem reverberating in the forum halls, the Stars countered with a heartfelt chant of "USA, USA" and the table was set for a "Battle Royale."

The fans were not even in their seats when the Stars found themselves down 1–0, and the hole got deeper as the first period ended with the Stars down 2–0. This woke up the sleeping giant, as the boys hankered back to a pregame speech from the legend Giles Gilbert – hold onto your pomme frittes, the Stars were out for revenge!

Joey "Hammertime" Redfearn lit the lamp early in the second and the momentum shifted. After a feeding frenzy in front of the Habs' net, Carbone scored to tie the game, but the Habs would not go away quietly and responded with the go-ahead goal within minutes.

With the tension mounting, the Stars responded with the tenacious fore-checking of Paul Parker, Mats Nelson and Michael Lund. Parker, Nelson and Lund played textbook two way hockey for the entire tournament.

It was the back-checking efforts of Matthew Scullion (look up "back checking" in the dictionary and you'll see a picture of Matt Scullion) that set up the third goal on a laser from Sullivan, and at the end of the second, the score was deadlocked at –3.

Doyle then took matters into his own hands, burying two back-to-back goals to give the Stars a two goal cushion, but the Habs pulled their goaltender and buried one with 34 seconds left to narrow the margin to one, 5–4. With Redfearn in the sin bin, his leadership was omnipresent as his teammates stifled the Habs and the cup cleared customs on the way back to the USA

Skippers to sail with experience

By Eric MacCarthy
CORRESPONDENT

The Cohasset High baseball team opened its season last Friday with a dominating 8-0 victory in Kingston over Sacred Heart.

Although a non-league game, Cohasset showed that it is ready to compete in the challenging South Shore League.

The Skippers came out swinging in their first game of the season, as they piled up 10 hits. Starting for the Skippers was junior ace Brian Hill. Hill went five shutout innings, stacking up nine strikeouts, giving up only two hits and a walk.

Closing out the game in the final two innings was fellow junior Dave Snowdale, who had no walks, gave up only one hit, and struck out four of the six batters he faced.

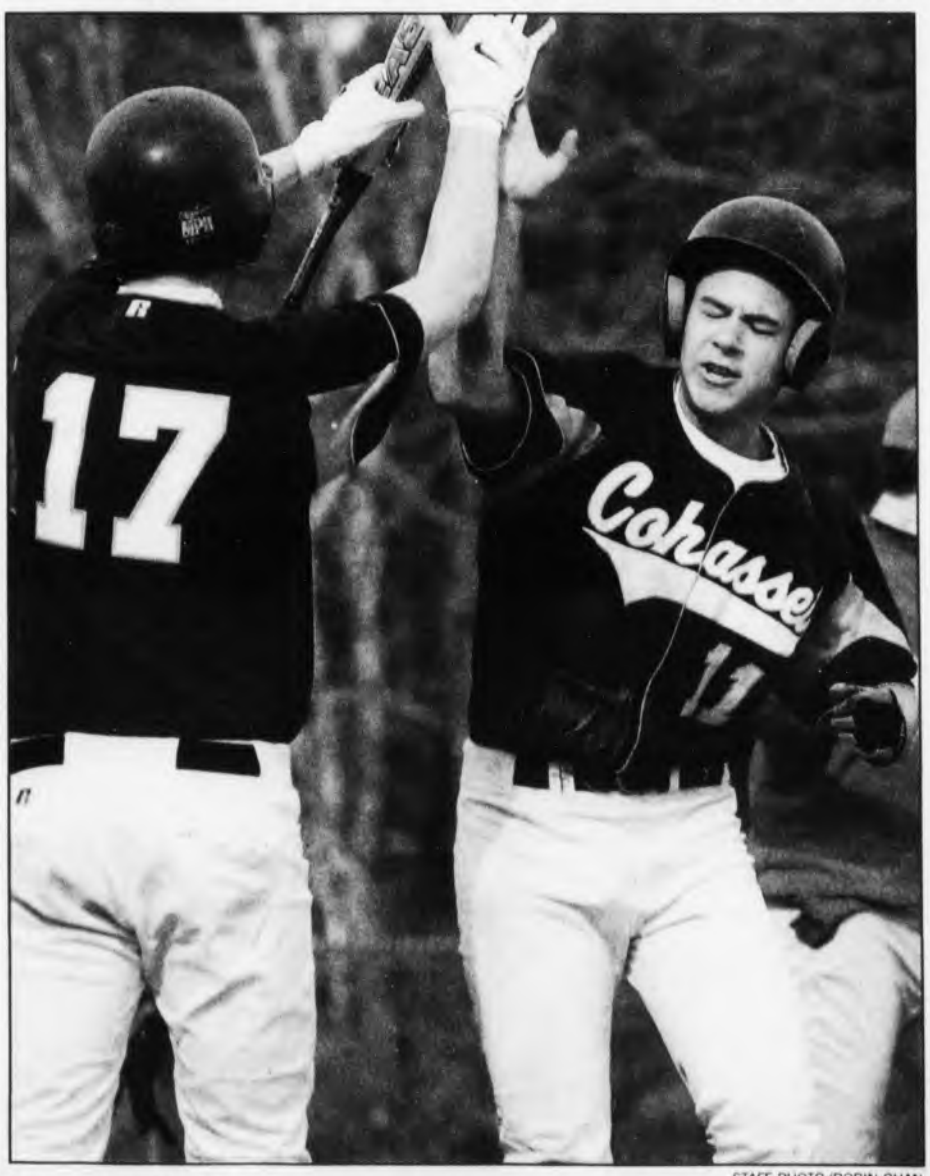
"It was pleasing to see Snowdale throw as well as he did," said head coach Al Gallotta, "He threw a lot harder than he did last year."

With a total of 13 combined strikeouts for Hill and Snowdale, Cohasset's defense had little to worry about in the field. That helped the team play error-free baseball, something Gallotta will hope to see more of.

"The fact that we played errorless was encouraging," he said. "[Defense] was our one true weak spot last year."

Not only did Cohasset's pitching and defense play spectacular, but Cohasset's offense really put the game away early. In the first inning, Cohasset scored two runs and added another six in the second, to account for all the scoring for the game.

The leading hitter was junior Kenny Muir, who was the only player to get two hits. Muir also drove in three runs for the Skippers. Senior Corbin Faber had a hit and an RBI. Alex Goetz, another junior, also had an RBI on a sacrifice fly, but also had the only extra base hit in the game with an early double.



The Skippers will need to take this win and run with it as they look to improve on last season.

"I hope to improve on last year with a good chunk of our core returning," said Gallotta.

He will have 10 returning varsity players from last year, including four seniors: Fletcher Smalzel, Faber, John Harrington and Nick Zappolo. Gallotta also has four players from junior varsity last year. Senior Austin Lanzillotti will be prevented from playing for the team this year due to a back injury.

The hardest job this year for Gallota will be dealing with the amount of depth he has and trying to get everyone playing

Nick Zappolo (11) gets a high five from teammate Kenny Muir (17) after scoring on a passed ball in the first inning of last Friday's season opener against Sacred Heart. Zappolo's run would be the first in Cohasset's 8-0 win.

All-Scholastic girls basketball team

Cohasset's Sam Lehr among area's elite

As is always the case with these kinds of things, the selection process with this team was not an easy one.

Unlike individual league all-star teams, we did not choose our team in deference to event considerations. Instead the only criteria we considered was overall value these athletes had to their respective teams.

In the end; however, the sports staff at Community Newspaper Company (CNC) had to make some tough decisions and we do feel secure that we chose the top public school girls basketball players for this honor.

It should be noted due to the large number of athletes in the CNC region, we split the athletes into two teams for girls basketball: North and South. This is the CNC All-Scholastic North girls basketball squad comprised of athletes from the following schools: Hanover, Marshfield, Weymouth, Braintree, Norwell, Scituate, Hingham, Abington, Rockland, Silver Lake, Pembroke, Cohasset and Duxbury.

Next week: boys basketball.

Sam Lehr – Sophomore
Center – Cohasset

From her center position, the 6-foot Lehr was the anchor of an exceptionally young Skippers team that won 11 games, including a preliminary round dismissal of Bristol-Plymouth in the Div. 4 South sectional…Finished with a double-double in that game, and followed it with a game-high 12 points in Cohasset's first round loss to eventual sectional champion Sacred Heart…Scored 23 points in season opener against Holbrook and didn't look back…Also a sound defensive presence, Lehr was far and away Cohasset's leading rebounder and shot-blocker…Praised by Cohasset head coach John Levangie for her leadership down the stretch…Lehr also plays soccer for CHS

Treasa O'Neil –
Senior (Captain)
Guard – Abington

The heart and soul of a young ball club O'Neil was a player that needed to be accounted for at all times because she was capable of going off in any game. Just ask Hull, where she went off for 40 points in a thrilling four overtime victory. O'Neil helped lead the Green Wave back to the tournament this season while averaging 13.1 points per game and a little over six rebounds a game. She was a South Shore League all-star this season. Her scoring totals would have been higher had she not moved to the point guard position early in the year. Her production will be hard to replace for the Green Wave next year. In the spring she is also the starting catcher for the softball team.

Jess DeGraan – Senior
(Captain)
Guard – Braintree

As the only returning starter from Braintree's 2006 state championship team, DeGraan stepped up this year to lead the Wamps to a 15-win season…Counted on to improve her scoring totals this year, DeGraan delivered, consistently putting up double-digit numbers in the points column…Ran the team efficiently from the point and was also the catalyst for a defense that was the team's strength all year…Led the Wamps in points, assists and steals…Scored a team-high 14 points in Braintree's first round state tournament win over Fontbonne…Also a superb soccer player for the two-time defending state champions in that sport, where she was a three-time All-Scholastic

Tricia Gaine – Senior
(Captain)
Center – Braintree

With all three frontcourt starters graduating from last year's state champions, the 5-foot-11 Gaine capably did her part to fill those shoes with a strong senior campaign…The Wamps' go-to player in the paint, Gaine was a regular double-figure point scorer throughout the season…Scored nine points in Braintree's first round state tournament win over Fontbonne, seven of them coming late in the second half to help seal the victory…Scored a team-high 14 in the Wamps' second round loss to New Bedford…Finished as one of the team's leading rebounders…Gaine also played softball for BHS

Sara Schwanke –
Senior (Captain)
Guard – Duxbury

This athletic player was a big reason why Duxbury was so good at playing the spoiler this season…Far better than their 7-13 record would indicate, Schwanke and the Green Dragons went toe-to-toe with the Patriot League's best, knocking off Hingham (52-46) and falling in close games to each division's champions, Scituate (58-56) and Rockland (73-69)…Schwanke led the Duxbury squad in scoring with an average 12 points per game, putting her third in the Keenan Div. ranks…Quickness was among her greatest attributes on the court as she proved effective both in the lane and from 3-point land…Put up 16 points against Rockland…The Patriot League All-star has been called the MVP of the team by her coach.

Brittany Sutton –
Senior (Captain)
Center – Hanover

This Patriot League All-star had a breakout season for the Lady Indians (15-6, 8-4) under the rim, averaging 14 points per game to lead the squad…Third among Fisher Div. scorers, Sutton's presence in the paint was undeniable…In a league loaded with size under the rim, Sutton went toe-to-toe with all of them…The senior played some of her best basketball in the biggest games, putting up 17 points and playing great defense on fellow AS Jackie Bohenek in a tough 52-47 setback…Also a great rebounder, Sutton averaged nine boards per game for Hanover, which was second to Rockland in the final league standings…A year round hoop player, Sutton hopes to continue her basketball career in college next winter.

Abby Harris –
Senior (Captain)
Forward – Hingham

A four-year starter in the paint for the Harborwomen, Harris often made it look effortless on the court this winter…Second on her the Hingham team in scoring with an average 13 points per game, Harris' played tough under the rim, sizing up with what was a very solid Patriot League…Her consistency at the post helped the Harborwomen (15-6) surge through the postseason Div. 2 South tourney, where they reached the semifinals for the first time…In the tourney opener against Quincy, Harris netted nine points and she added another six in a quarterfinal win over Holliston…Harris is a two-time Patriot League All-star and is making her first appearance on the All-Scholastic squad…The senior plays year round and hopes to continue her hoop career in college.

Jillian Watts –
Senior (Captain)
Forward – Hingham

One word best describes this talented forward: Workhorse…Watts seemingly never gave up on a play and that resulted in another fine season for the two-year starter…The senior led the Harborwomen (15-6) in scoring for the second-straight year with an average 14 points per game, putting her second on the Keenan Div. list behind only Scituate's Corey Cuddihy…A big-game player throughout her career, Watts turned in perhaps her best performance of the season in a thrilling 52-48 win over Scituate, netting a double-double with 21 points, 10 rebounds in the victory that put Hingham in a position to share the title…A loss to Duxbury would pit them second (8-3)…Watts had some key performances in Hingham's run to the Div. 2 South semifinals, scoring 11 in the opener against Quincy and led with 17 against Holliston in the quarterfinals.

Elizabeth Dow – Senior Forward – Marshfield

Simply put, there's very little Dow didn't do for the Lady Rams this season…Stepping out of the shadow of a pair of graduated primetime players, Dow was the catalyst on the 11-12 Marshfield squad this winter…Dow led her team in scoring with an average 18 points per game and trailed only fellow All-Scholastic Emily Trapp in the Atlantic Coast League ranks…An ACL All-star this season, Dow scored 20 or more points in eight games this winter and was an essential part in a pair of four-game win streaks during the season…Great athletic ability and speed were her best attributes on the court…Dow also did a great job of getting to the line…Also a talented runner, Dow will compete on the outdoor track team this spring at MHS.

Katelyn Stravinsky – Senior
(Capt.)
Forward – Norwell

Fully recovered from a broken wrist that derailed her junior season to lead Norwell in scoring and rebounding for the fourth straight winter…Stravinsky averaged over 17 points per game this season to top the South Shore League for the third straight year…Had one of her best games in Jan. 16 win at Cohasset, scoring 20 of her game-high 24 points in the second half of a 51-43 Clippers victory…Hit the game-winning three in Jan. 30 win over Abington, highlighting the 5-foot-8 forward's ability to score from anywhere on the court…Stravinsky, a four-year starter, finished her impressive high school career with over 1,300 career points

Jackie Bohenek –
Junior (Captain)
Forward – Rockland

Few have been able to keep up with this rising star…A two-year starter and Patriot League All-star, Bohenek led her Rockland (19-3, 12-1) team and the Fisher Div. in scoring again this winter, averaging 19 points per game…Also a great rebounder, Bohenek put up double-doubles in virtually every game this season…An extremely athletic gal, Bohenek was lethal on a fast break, aggressive under the rim, and a great free throw shooter…The junior was also a great decision maker on the court and a very unselfish player…Put up 23 points in a comeback win over Duxbury (72-60) and scored 26 in a 54-40 victory over a strong Whitman/Hanson team…Scored a combined 38 points in two games to make the All-Tourney team at Massasoit, where Rockland split games with Braintree (56-51 loss) and Scituate (52-47 win)…A standout cross country and track runner, Bohenek will run this spring at RHS.

Cohasset's Sam Lehr (52) averaged a double-double this season for the Skippers.

Stephanie Crawford –
Junior (Captain)
Guard – Rockland

An extremely smart and confident player at the point, Crawford's decision making ability and vision of the court has made her one of the most feared point-guards in the Patriot League…The two-time PL All-star not only contributes heavily to the offense with her great passing ability, stellar 3-point shooting, and slick drives in the lane, but she's also a leader on defense…Crawford has a great read on the ball and plays a big part in the Lady Bulldogs' very effective transition game…Racked up several steals this season while also leading the squad in assists for the second straight year…A consistent shooter in the field and at the stripe, Crawford averaged 14 points a game for the Fisher Div. champions (12-1) and was fourth among the league ranks…A year round player, Crawford will return to captain the squad again next winter.

Corey Cuddihy – Senior
(Captain)
Guard – Scituate

Emerged as Scituate's go-to scorer this season, averaging over 14 points per game to lead the Patriot League Keenan division in scoring…Cuddihy is at her best behind the three-point line, but can also put it on the floor and find an open teammate with a good pass…Scored 15 points in Sailors' key Jan. 26 win over Hanover, including a pair of three-pointers down the stretch to put the Indians away…Also scored 15 to help Scituate beat Marshfield in the championship game of the Lapels Holiday Classic over the Christmas break…Will be joining her brother, Tom (SHS Class of '04), at Bridgewater State College, where she will continue her basketball career

Heidi Sheehan – Senior
(Captain)
Guard – Scituate

If you want to show an aspiring high school basketball player how to play point guard, watching Sheehan in action would be a good place to start…An exceptionally smart player who always has her head up looking for an open teammate…A versatile player, Sheehan led the Sailors in assists and steals, in addition to being a good rebounder for a guard…Could also take over games down the stretch with her scoring, possessing a good jump shot and shooting almost 90 percent from the free throw line…Sheehan also played field hockey and softball for SHS

Samantha Ford – Junior
Guard – Silver Lake

After several season on the outside looking in when it came to tournament time, Ford as well as fellow All-Scholastic Amanda Graham have led a junior class that has paved the way for the lady Lakers to make tournament appearances at the end of the last two seasons…Ford was a Patriot League All-Star again this year, helping direct Silver Lake to an regular season record of 11-9 and a 13th seed in the Division 2 South bracket…The lady Lakers stay in the tournament would be short thanks to a 45-41 loss at the hands of Quincy High…Ford was the catalyst of the Silver Lake offense, equally adept at dishing the ball off to a teammate or taking the rock to the basket herself. She scored a team-high 17 points in a win over Duxbury that qualified Silver Lake for the tournament.

Amanda Graham – Junior Forward – Silver Lake

The lanky junior forward showed that she could score from in close and even nail the outside jumper when she had the open shot…One of the premier players in the Patriot League, Graham helped the lady Lakers to an 11-9 mark this season as well as a second consecutive trip to the tournament. They were sent home by Quincy High, 45-41, in a preliminary round battle…A Patriot League All-Star, Graham was a big part of the lady Lakers winning eight of their final 10 games heading into the tourney. . . Graham also was a major part of the success of the Silver Lake volleyball team that made the tournament last fall.

time. Only three positions have what appears to be a designated player for that spot. At catcher will be junior Kyle Pinkus, who had limited playing time last year behind the plate. In left field will be Goetz, who excelled while playing there last year on varsity. Last will be Zappolo, a captain, at shortstop. Due to a broken leg last April, Zappolo's season was cut short, which was a detrimental loss to the team.

Both center and right field will depend on who is pitching that day. When not pitching, Snowdale will be in center, and when junior Sam DeGiacomo is not pitching he will be in right. When either of those two is on the mound, it will most likely be Harrington or the team's lone sophomore, John Sturino, filling in.

Against Sacred Heart, Faber started at second base, but that will most likely be a rotation between Faber and second year varsity player, junior Pat Doonan. At third, Smalzel started against Sacred Heart but that too will be open to others like Faber.

Muir, who got the start at first base last Friday, will have stiff competition with fellow junior Ian Cundall, as they are both similar players. Junior Chris Rose, a versatile player, will also be competing for playing time at first, but can also play right field, second base, and third for Gallotta.

With so many players to go around and so few spots, Gallotta will have to do his best to fit the right player to his position.

"Whoever has got the hot bat will play," said the coach.

Gallotta is very happy with the squad he has and believes that they can have a successful season, saying, "They're all hard workers and truly love baseball, which makes it enjoyable for me."

Gallotta does not like to assume or put any high expectations for his teams because it only sets them up for failure.

"We need to take it one day, one game, one inning at a time," he said. "We're only as good as our last game."

In that case, this Cohasset team is outstanding after their first game of the season.

COHASSET YOUTH LACROSSE

Boys

The U15 Blue squad's opening match on Scituate's turf field was played in mid-season form. Cohasset fielded a team of half their numbers and jumped out to a strong 3–0 first quarter start. The second quarter was non-stop action ending in a half-time score with Cohasset up 5–3.

Just when it looked as if the game was in Cohasset's control, Scituate broke out in the third quarter with five unanswered goals. The Blues outscored them in the final quarter, but the game ended 9–7 in Scituate favor.

Cohasset's players put in a tremendous effort. In particular, Willy Brown who posted a dozen saves in net through three quarters, and Chase Murphy, who took the net in the fourth quarter with four big saves himself.

Derek Youngman had three goals and one assist in attack. Morgan Grasz posted two goals and three assists from the middy position. Alex Kinnealey ripped a pair of goals and Jake Kissick had an assist after a full field clear from the defensive position. Everyone else contributed to the effort through solid ball control, heads up passing, and effective checking.

The U-15 White team saw its first action this year at home against Norwell where they put on an impressive team effort in all categories of the game.

Norwell scored 10 seconds into the game, which seemed to spur White into action. Cohasset immediately got very aggressive on offense, attacking ground balls and keeping the action in the offensive end, striking for seven tallies in the first frame. Pete McKenna (one goal), Thomas Flibotte (three goals, one assist) and Charlie Neaves (goal) were relentless in snagging dozens of ground balls throughout the game, creating many transitional sets for White.

The team had nine different scorers – for 15 goals – but most importantly, with eight assists and some very unselfish play. The defense was rock solid, as Kyle Healy only faced three shots while having Sam Leahy, Geoff Swain and Dean McNary (three goals, assist) as his "Ministers of Defense." Jack Carrier (two goals), John Collins (two goals, two assists), Danny Czerkawksi (goal, assist), Mitch McNary (goal, assist) and Brennan Bukowksi (assist) were all over the Norwell goalie.

Strong field support and pressure were added by Sam Richardson (goal, two assists), James McElvey, Grayden Foley, and John McGoldrick, as their efforts led to a number of the Cohasset opportunities. Many players transitioned to different positions throughout the game showing a very versatile, athletic and supportive group that looks to have a great season ahead of them.

Cohasset U13 Blue opened its 2007 season on the road in Scituate. Despite some early season rustiness and the loss of some players due to playoff hockey commitments, the boys played a committed and energetic game. Playing on the Scituate High School stadium field, the boys got the experience of a high school environment.

The team saw solid performances from all players. Despite falling behind by two goals, the squad stayed focus and battled back to trail 2-1 at the half. Cohasset's score came from Will Golden on a feed from Charley Michalowski. Strong goaltending from Mats Nelson kept Cohasset in the game. Also noteworthy defensive play from Zach Strecker, Ryan McGovern and Blake Erler marked the first half play.

The second half was all Cohasset, as the team buckled down and held Scituate scoreless and netted five unanswered goals. Cohasset tied the score at the end of the third quarter on an unassisted goal from Golden, his second of the day.

The fourth quarter saw Cohasset's experience take hold as solid two-way play lead to four goals. Andrew Fontaine and Blair McGowan notched their first of the season, both unassisted; and Golden netted his third and fourth of the season. Overall, a good solid effort from the boys. Next up for the squad is a home game against Bridgewater after the Easter break on April 15.

The Cohasset White U13 squad started off the season the same way the weather did, with a great showing and a solid victory over a developing Scituate team.

With only a single practice under their belt, the boys showed that there wasn't too much rust on their sticks from the winter, as they took the opening face-off into a fast break and notched the first tally of the game less then a minute in. The hometown team stayed focus and worked the possession well on transitions and by half-time had established a pretty big lead that held throughout the rest of the contest.

Scituate made a game of it late in the second half, but the team stepped up to the challenge and finished off with an 8–4 win. John Mills and Mark Brown shared the goaltending duties, with Mills sometimes forgetting he was a goalie by coming out and stuffing several players up by the box while Brown fashioned himself a hockey goalie, making numerous kick saves to keep the Scituate scoring in check throughout the game. Both also shored up the defensive and midfield corps as well.

The strong defensive effort led by Nick Tangherlini (who also played middy and dominated face-offs), Connor Green, Chandler Skolnick and Derek Benson. Jimmy (Cole) Maher led the middy corps with Zach Coggins, Liam Burke and Jack O'Brien. Alex Kent had a standout game with several goals. Solid offensive performances were turned in by Joey Sestito, Axel Seppala and Dan Tangherlini, doing double duty at attack and midfield showing off some of the family speed and quickness.

One of the highlights of the game was an end-to-end break by Tangherlini, who stripped the ball on defense and took it all the way down around the Scituate net and found Liam Burke, who turned and put the "rock in the sack" for a defining goal in the second half.

The U13 Black team met a large and physical team in Bridgewater.

The Red and Blue capitalized on ground balls and dropped in two goals early in the first quarter. Cohasset's defense, led by Jimmy Lydon in the cage, fought the heavy offense and blocked several shots except one just before halftime. Facing a 3-0 deficit, Cohasset's middies and attack rallied in the second half.

Colin Whelan who made many feeding passes to his teammates, scored to open the game for Cohasset Black. Talent was on Cohasset's side but time had run its course. Congrats to the boys for great sportsmanship.

The season opener at Scituate turned out to be a tough match-up for the Cohasset U11 boys. Less than half of this years' team are returning players. A handful of the fourth graders are new to lacrosse.

What the Cohasset laxers lacked in skill, they made up in hustle and desire. The boys were up 3-0 after the first quarter, ended the half at 4-3 and won the game 8-4.

At the U11 level it is common to start the season with most goals coming from fast break opportunities, and Jeff Powers, Cameron Steele and Ben Buckley all posted fast breaking goals. Newcomers including Michael Lund, Buckley and Matt Froio also posted goals.

Fans saw great defensive play in middies Sam Murphy, Ross Erler and defenseman Harry Seraikas. Curtis Golden had one goal and also played an exceptional second half as goalie. What was equally impressive was the hustle and enthusiasm from some of the newer players including Wyatt, Brian Counihan and Evan Canney. In all, the squad learned a lot, had fun and played a great game as a team.

The White U11 team started off its season with a dominating 12-6 victory over a talented Scituate team on Sunday. Both teams showed skill and ability, but it was clear from the beginning that Cohasset was in charge.

It took a mere 16 seconds for Cohasset to win the face-off and put the ball in the cage. Patrick Holway raced down the field and made the first of his five goals for the day. Max Fitzgerald, Dan Axelson (goal, assist), Martin Buckley, Ryan McElhinney (goal), Connor Hayden (goal, assist), and Owen Kefallinos took control from the start and never looked back.

The midfielders won over 80 percent of the game face-offs and put Scituate on the defensive all game long. Holway and Axelson were also strong on ground balls, scooping up everything they could reach, keeping Cohasset White with the ball.

The defense was led by the courageous play of Connor Naughton in the cage. Naughton made eight saves, deflected several other shots, and cleared the ball all afternoon long. In front of him was an aggressive defense that included Mike Yerardi, Nick Lydon, Justin Fein, Luke O'Brien, Jack Donohue and Ian Kennedy.

Scituate found it difficult to penetrate against the Cohasset "D" most of the day, and this unit will only get better as the season progresses and gain more experience.

The offensive side of the field also showed strength as the attack put numbers on the board as well. A.J. Kucinski notched three goals in his debut and with the help of Sean Mavilia, Cole Morrison, Levante Haber, Cal Robbins, Chris Lydon and Adam Beson, the two lines of attack kept the ball on the offensive side of the field. Feeding off of the midfield play, the attack was able to find open space and keep the heat on the Scituate defense.

Were it not for the exceptional play of the other team's goalie, the score would have been a good deal higher as Morrison, Mavilia and Haber made some very good shots on goal. All in all, it was a good start with a tough schedule ahead, and a lot of work to get done in preparation for it.

Tennis tournament to benefit Children's Hosptial

Save the date for the annual Cohasset Tennis Tournament, a mixed-doubles tennis tradition that began in the 1950's and continues today to benefit Children's Hospital.

This year's event kicks off on Friday, July 13 with the annual dinner auction at the Lightkeepers residence. The popular tennis tournament, which takes place on private courts throughout Cohasset, is set for the weekend of July 14 and 15.

This charity tennis tournament was originally started by Jesse Cox and her neighbors in the 1950's. It has since grown to include hundreds of players, from life-long Cohasset residents to newcomers.

The tournament also brings together a wide array of tennis abilities, from those who dust off their rackets once a year to those who are passionate about the sport. In the past eight years alone, about $100,000 has been raised for Children's Hospital.

For more information about the tournament or to be added to the e-mail distribution list, please contact Corey Axelson at gallella63@hotmail.com.

Senioritis reaches epidemic proportions

LIFE AT CHS

MICHAEL CORRY

Rather than combating our complacency, students carry on with the motions of a regular school day. This sickness is perilous, and highly contagious.

It seems like this grey weather is infectious, spreading a dour mood to the students of CHS — who are already grumpy enough, most of the time. Let's not talk about the forecast, lest the weekend share these unfavorable heavens. Once you go on weather.com and build your hopes up, Mother Nature goes to work…with a sledgehammer. Vacation's scent is in the air, and that may be the only vaccine for our plague. Even if your wayward children seem hell-bent on ruining somebody's else's day right now, never fear, fellow Cohassetonians, or Cohaitians, if you prefer; once vacation (our inoculation) hits, we'll spring back to our normal selves.

Something, anything, please swoop in and save the graduating class of 2007 from their other epidemic—Senioritis. Perhaps it's the countdown of the last 30 days or so up on the wall…whatever the reason, it's much too easy letting apathy take hold. Overall, the majority of '07 is doing time. Rather than combating our complacency, students carry on with the motions of a regular school day. This sickness is perilous, and highly contagious.

Underclassmen: be wary, falling prey to Senioritis as a member of the Junior, Sophomore, or Freshman class is one of the worst things you can do for your high school career.

Here is this week's school news.

• Monday after school the Professional Development Committee met.

• Tuesday after school the Middle School Faculty met in the Library.

• Wednesday the Norfolk County District Attorney's Office performed the dramatic presentation "Consent." This school-wide assembly and presentation of the play was aimed to help educate young people about the age of consent, statutory rape, and how alcohol can affect consent.

• Wednesday after school the School Council met.

• Wednesday night the School Committee met.

• Mr. Buckley's Community Service class is going to start "Car Pool" days on Wednesdays after April Vacation. Students are encouraged to car pool to and from school in an effort to conserve fuel and help the environment.

• Next Wednesday the Social Service League of Cohasset will address Seniors with the video "Choices." The video was created by the Stverman family to educate graduating seniors about the lessons learned after the death of their son and brother, P.J., in an alcohol-related tragedy 11 years ago. All parents are invited to this free presentation next Tuesday, April 10th at 7 p.m. in the auditorium.

Well, that wraps up the school news. As always, any and all feedback or information is greatly appreciated, and can be sent (along with information you'd like printed) to Spinnaker@cohassetk12.org. Thanks for reading, and enjoy the weekend!

CMHS launches peer training program

During the months of January and February, 34 Cohasset High School students were trained by the Anti-Defamation League's A World Of Difference Institute to facilitate workshops on diversity-related issues to their peers and in doing so, to promote a more inclusive, respectful school community. The Peer Training Program at Cohasset Middle-High School has been made possible by the generous support of the Cohasset Diversity Committee.

"What is different about the peer training program is that it works on two levels to address bias-motivated behaviors such as name calling, bullying and harassment," states Phil Fogelman, Education Director of the Anti-Defamation League New England Region. "On one level, the program empowers young people to recognize the prejudices in themselves and others. On another level, it provides participants with the knowledge and skills to facilitate greater inter-group dialogue, understanding and respect."

The peer leaders completed their initial 18 hours of anti-bias training and meet biweekly with their program advisors, Beth McCoy and Stephanie Wooley, to review the curriculum and co-facilitate activities in preparation for the workshops that they will deliver to their younger middle school peers. Students who participate in these workshops gain a fuller appreciation of racial, ethnic, cultural, and other individual differences.

The peer leaders facilitated their first workshop with middle school students on March 30. Two peer leaders have been assigned to each middle school homeroom, and over the next several weeks the high school students will present seven workshops, beginning with an introduction to the program and each other, and then progressing through the discussion of topics such as bullying, ostracism and racial humor.

Jenny Cahill and Mark Flibotte practice facilitating a workshop on bullying before presenting it to their middle school peers.

A goal of the program is to not only expand each student's understanding and appreciation of diversity, but to form long-lasting advisor-advisee relationships between the middle school students and their older peers.

Tips for working your way up the career ladder

When it comes to the working world, there are myths and there are realities. Attaining a promotion by simply showing up on time and doing your job proficiently is the stuff of folklore. These days, employees have to really prove their worth to gain advancement, as many employers are asking employees to do more with fewer resources, find hidden efficiencies and keep operating costs low.

Peter Harris, chief executive officer of Snelling Staffing Services, offers the following tips to help employees make the most of the career opportunities that present themselves each day:

1. Keep up with industry trends and technology

Employers are all looking for top-caliber performers that possess very specific skills and know-how. In order to prove that you're the right fit for that management position you've been eyeing, you have to stay up on industry trends and the latest technologies being used in your field. The easiest way to "wow" your boss is to demonstrate the extent and timeliness of your acumen and expertise.

2. Stay marketable

Attend classes and seminars, especially if the company is willing to pay for the entry fees. Also, volunteer for projects that will enhance your abilities. Being involved shows initiative, an attribute your boss will respect. And, always keep an up-to-date resume on hand; you never know when a promotion will open up for applicants.

3. Be proactive

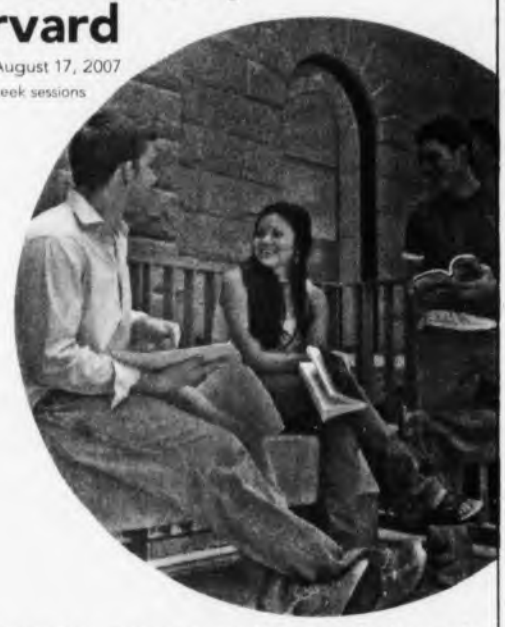
Sometimes, it's just about sitting down with your supervisor and asking, "What do I have to do to be on track toward a promotion?" Request specific feedback if there are areas in which your employer would like you to improve, and chart a timeline with specific productivity and/or quality goals.

4. Adopt a mentor

One of the best things you can to do to develop your own career is to learn more about the career of a superior or someone in leadership. Choose a person in your office or a peer within a trade association whom you respect and ask him or her to sit down with you on a regular basis to discuss your career and provide counsel. Finding a great mentor can boost your confidence, provide valuable insight and help you set attainable goals.

5. Cultivate a relationship with your supervisor

Especially in the staffing services' world, candidates seeking full-time employment should get to know the supervisor at their assignment better. If a supervisor likes you, is impressed by your work ethic and skill set, a temporary assignment could very easily turn into a more permanent position.



It's easy to get caught up and let another year slip by, but there are things you can do to breathe new life into your career. By pairing even just a few of these suggestions with a positive attitude and accountability, you'll be able to become a standout among your peers.

Crowds flock to the banks of the Potomac River to see the canopy of color during the annual Cherry Blossom Festival.

Pretty in pink

D.C. awash in color during Cherry Blossom Festival

By Jennifer Skala

Imagine a place where the air is lightly scented with a sweet aroma, the wind carries a dusting of soft petals, and beautiful pink flowers stretch as far as the eye can see. While this scene may seem like something out of a fairy tale, it's actually found in our nation's capital — a breathtaking oasis in the middle of one of the country's busiest cities.

The National Cherry Blossom Festival in Washington, DC is truly a magnificent sight. Occurring for approximately two weeks every spring, the festival celebrates the original gift of 3,000 cherry trees to the people of the Washington, DC in 1912 by the city of Tokyo. The gift symbolized the growing friendship between the United States and Japan. The first two of these trees were planted along the bank of the Tidal Basin.

Since 1912, additional cherry blossom trees and tree clippings have been planted in this area — within the heart of DC's monuments. Most notably, nearly 4,000 trees were accepted by First Lady Lady Bird Johnson in 1965. Today, the cherry blossoms appear to envelope this area of the city during the brief period they're in bloom.

This year, the official National Cherry Blossom Festival takes place through April 15. Though the peak blooming period is anticipated to be the first week in April, any visitor to DC during the festival will be sure to see some of the signature pink and white blossoms that have become a tradition in the capital. Horticulturalists from the National Park Service closely monitor the cherry blossom trees when they begin to bud in late February to pinpoint the exact dates of when the most perfect blooms will occur.

The cherry blossoms in DC are a must-see.

With bright pink flowers surrounding some of major monuments in our nation's capital, the cherry blossoms add something spectacular to these already stunning scenes. The cherry blossoms create an enchanting pink canopy above the walking paths found along the Tidal Basin and envelope the Thomas Jefferson Memorial and Franklin D. Roosevelt Memorial. The trees can also be found scattered throughout the city, on the National Mall, and along the Potomac River in DC.

The cherry blossoms may be a gardener's dream, but they're not just a sight for those with a green thumb. The National Cherry Blossom Festival offers daily events and entertainment celebrating the blooms, including the Parade of the National Cherry Blossom Festival, and the Sakura Matsuri — Japanese Street Festival. Dance troupes, musicians, and local children's groups also perform on the outdoor stage found at the base of the Jefferson Memorial.

More than 700,000 people visit Washington, DC each year to see these beautiful blooms. Many tourists travel from across the globe to take in this sight. The cherry blossom trees in our nation's capital truly exemplify the ideal of "America the Beautiful."

The writer hails from Massachusetts and is currently working in the capital at the National Zoo.

Our nation's capital is a popular tourist attraction year-round, but it is even more of a destination at cherry blossom time.

Travel tips

- For more information about the festival, log on to www.nationalcherryblossomfestival.com, where you will find a complete calendar of events and useful information.
- When visiting, take the Metrorail or Metrobus to the National Cherry Blossom Festival and elsewhere in the Washington metro area.

LEGAL NOTICE
THE COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS
MASSACHUSETTS HIGHWAY DEPARTMENT
NOTICE OF A PUBLIC HEARING

A Design Public Hearing will be held by MassHighway to discuss the proposed West Corner Culvert replacement (Route 228 over Straits Channel) in Hull, Cohasset and Hingham, Massachusetts.

WHERE:Hingham Town Hall
Central South Meeting Room, 2nd Floor
210 Central Street
Hingham, MA 02043

WHEN: Thursday, April 19, 2007 @ 7:00 PM

PURPOSE: The purpose of this hearing is to provide the public with the opportunity to become fully acquainted with the proposed project. All views and comments made at the hearing will be reviewed and considered to the maximum extent possible.

PROPOSAL: This project includes the replacement of the existing West Corner Culvert (Bridge No. C-17-004), along with the sluice gates, located at the Hull/Hingham/Cohasset Town Lines. The project will also provide ecological benefits to Straits Pond and reduce flooding potential. The project also includes: roadway reconstruction, retaining walls, installation of sidewalks, granite curbing and driveways, drainage system upgrades, waterline replacement, sanitary sewer line replacement, installation of guardrail, traffic signs, and pavement markings. The approach roadway to the bridge will meet the existing grading. The horizontal alignment will remain essentially the same. The total length of the roadway reconstruction is approximately 870 feet. The bridge will be closed during construction and a temporary detour will be established.

A secure right-of-way is necessary for this project. Acquisitions in fee and permanent or temporary easements may be required. The town is responsible for acquiring all needed rights in private or public lands. MassHighway's policy concerning land acquisitions will be discussed at this hearing.

Written views received by MassHighway subsequent to the date of this notice and up to five (5) days prior to the date of the hearing shall be displayed for public inspection and copying at the time and date listed above. Plans will be on display one-half hour before the hearing begins, with an engineer in attendance to answer questions regarding this project. A project handout is available on the MassHighway website listed below.

Grin and bare it

'The Full Monty' exposed at Company Theatre

By R. Scott Reedy
CORRESPONDENT

Someone should alert Chippendales to start scouting locations south of Boston, because if a recent audience for the musical "The Full Monty" at Norwell's Company Theatre is any indication, South Shore women will turn out in force even at the hint of a male strip show. The line for the ladies' room during intermission stretched through the lobby, making two clear points: the performance was sold out and most husbands and boyfriends had been left at home.

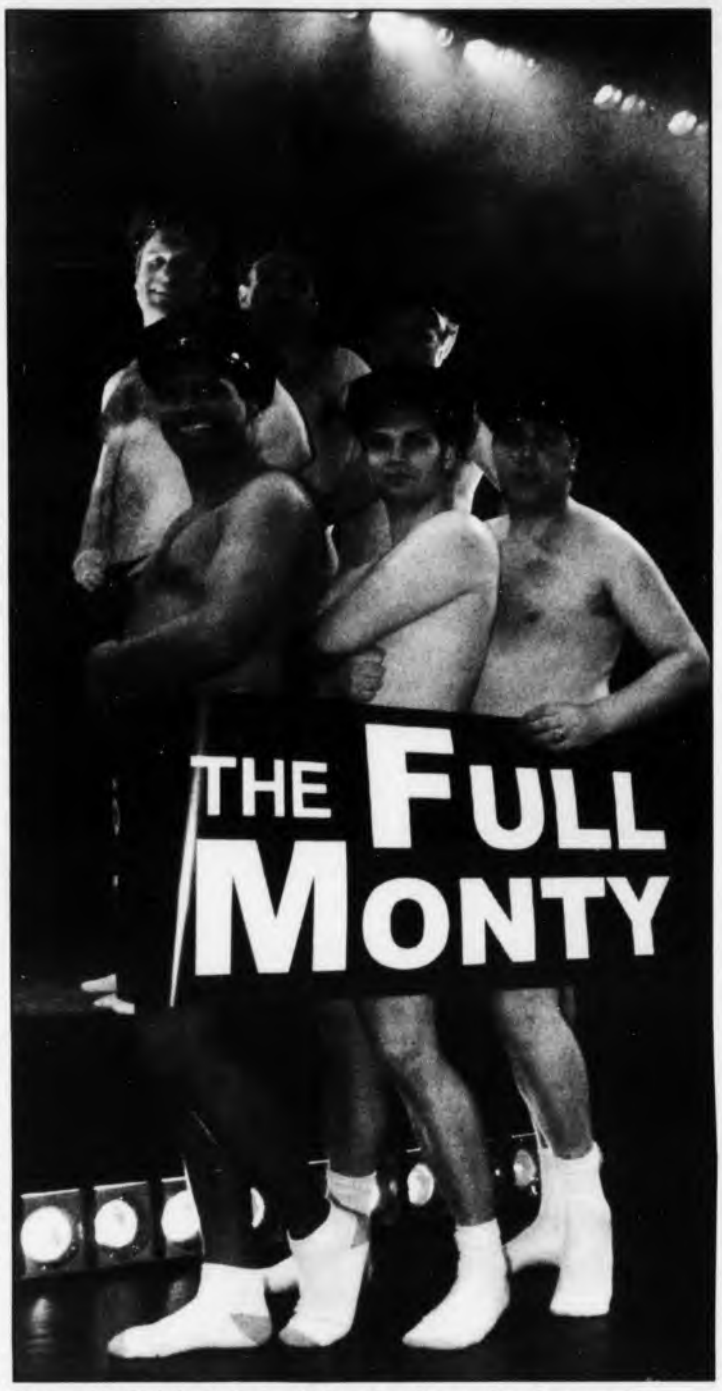
When the time came for the much-ballyhooed strip scene that closes the show, women of all ages were sitting ramrod straight and ready to give their full attention to the show's most-discussed moment. Anticipation wasn't the only thing that got the audience's energy up, however — they were also enjoying a funny, sweet, and entertaining musical based on the 1997 feature film of the same name. While the movie was set in working class England, the Broadway musical adaptation of "The Full Monty" transplanted the six out-of-work laborers-turned-male strippers to Buffalo, N.Y. When the bills begin to mount, the laid-off steel workers realize that they may make more money by taking their clothes off at a local nightclub than by taking jobs as security guards.

With a book by Terrence McNally ("Kiss of the Spiderwoman," "Master Class") and music and lyrics by David Yazbek ("Dirty Rotten Scoundrels"), "The Full Monty" opened to very favorable reviews on Broadway in October 2000, but when a little show called "The Producers" came along the following April, it immediately became the must-see hit of that season. The Mel Brooks musical went on to beat "The Full Monty" in no fewer than 10 Tony Award categories in which both shows were nominated Even with a two year run in New York and a respectable national tour that played Boston's Colonial Theatre in June 2002, "Monty" — like its hapless heroes, turned would-be Golden Banana aspirants, who decide to bare it all in the name of love and money — never seemed to achieve the success it deserved.

And, at just under three hours, with intermission, "Monty" risks seeming too full, but the show makes up for it with a fun and bouncy score and many memorable moments played with winning energy by a solid Company cast.

Directors Zoe Bradford and Jordie Saucerman keep the energy high without sacrificing any of the show's softer, more affecting moments.

The talented Michael J. Foley is convincing as Jerry Lukowski, the ex-foreman who is also an ex-husband desperate to find a way to pay the child support necessary to maintain a relationship with his young son. As Lukowski's longtime friend, Dave Bukatinsky, James Tallach offers up a perfect blend of humor and pathos as a gentle soul whose unemployment has damaged his self-esteem and driven a wedge between him and his wife and friends. Dave's mid-section is more two liter bottle than six-pack, but Jerry still wants his friend at his side in his new venture.



Also recruited by Jerry for the six-man dance troupe are two fellow ex-steel workers who turn out to be gay, an older African-American who lost his job at McDonald's for giving some of his customers a less than happy meal, and even his former boss at the mill who decides he better dance if he ever hopes to pay off the debts that have resulted in the repossession of just about everything he has except his loving wife.

Christopher R. D. Landis and Christian T. Potts bring warmth to their roles as Malcolm MacGregor and Ethan Girard, the newly out-of-the-closet pair. Steven M. Key's Noah "Horse" Simmons may have a world-weary walk, but he has all the right moves on the dance floor in the spirited "Big Black Man" number, and David F. Fougere is well cast as Harold Nichols, the numbers cruncher whose stalled management career makes him the logical coach for the unlikely team.

The men in the cast receive enthusiastic support not only from the females in the audience, but also from those with whom they share the stage. On Broadway, the timeworn pianist was played to perfection by the late Kathleen Freeman. In Norwell, Juliana Dennis makes her own distinct impression on the hard-bitten role, especially with her wonderful act two opener, "Jeanette's Showbiz Number." Melissa Prusinski, Christine Joyce, and the always dependable Paula Markowicz are strong in supporting roles and highly effective in musical numbers, too, including the act one anthem, "It's a Woman's World."

Musical Director Michael Joseph ably leads a wonderful pit band of local musicians who never miss a beat. Directors Zoe Bradford and Jordie Saucerman keep the energy high without sacrificing any of the show's softer, more affecting moments. Bradford has also done a wonderful job with the set that includes a very realistic men's room and a car that proves size isn't everything.

("The Full Monty" will be the Company Theatre, 30 Accord Park Drive, Norwell, through April 7. For tickets and information, visit the box office, call 781-871-2787 or go online at www.companytheatre.com.)

Movie review

You'll fall for this 'Hoax'

The Hoax (A-)

By James Verniere
FILM CRITIC

The American psyche reserves a place of honor for frauds, charlatans, imposters, phonies, hucksters, grifters, con men and scammers of all shapes and sizes.

Of course, Hollywood also loves these characters and their stories because Southern California is their Mecca.

"The Hoax," a fact-based film about one of the boldest scam artists in modern history, tells the story of the wobbly rise and shameful fall of Clifford Irving (Richard Gere in a career-capping performance), a mid-level author who stumbles upon a seemingly foolproof scheme to make himself a bundle.

If the whole world is obsessed with a "lunatic hermit" — a heard but unseen Howard Hughes — who wears tissue-box slippers and never speaks or appears publicly, why not claim to be his confidante and write his exclusive autobiography? This was the Faustian bargain Irving made with himself as he conned famed publishing house McGraw-Hill in the Vietnam War-plagued 1970s.

Together with friend and researcher Dick Susskind (Alfred Molina channeling Bert Lahr's Cowardly Lion), Irving bluffs his two-faced, Manhattan literary agent Andrea Tate (Hope Davis), blusters his way past skeptical McGraw-Hill executive Shelton Fisher (a dark-browed Stanley Tucci) and even charms the corporate eminence grise Harold McGraw himself (John Carter).

Meanwhile, back home in semi-rural Croton Falls, N.Y., Irving's Swiss-German artist wife Edith Sommer (Marcia Gay Harden) assures her discouraged husband he's better than all the "potato people" with whom he must deal.

Is it any wonder Irving's previous book was "Fake!," a portrait of the notorious modern art forger Elmyr de Hory?

His gray hair dyed dark brown, Gere captures the dizzying anxiety of a person whose status as a "great man" threatens to explode at any moment into utter calumny and shame. As Irving gets deeper into his scheme — and deeper into what might well have been a well-researched, unauthorized biography — he begins to turn into Hughes, impersonating first his voice on tape and then co-opting his appearance and clothes.

"The Hoax" has much in common with Steven Spielberg's "Catch Me If You Can," another celebration of a scam artist, but is more satisfying. The film convincingly argues that the Watergate break-in was the result of President Nixon's fear of revelations about his relationship with Hughes in Irving's book.

Director Lasse Hallstrom ("Casanova"), who was born in Stockholm, presents Irving as a talented fabulist, whose lies are artful rearrangements of myth, truth and legend, suggesting that Irving was a novelist who lost his way.

"The Hoax" also hints the war in Vietnam and the Nixon presidency, and by association other wars and presidencies, are nothing more than cruel frauds perpetrated upon our citizens.

In the supporting cast, Eli Wallach and Julie Delpy (as Irving's mistress Nina van Pallandt) are terrific.

While the third act drags notably, "The Hoax" is a timely and engrossing cautionary tale and a more honest portrait of Hughes than Martin Scorsese's entirely Hollywood-ized 2004 biopic "The Aviator." That film was the real hoax.

Rated R. "The Hoax" contains sexual situations, brief nudity and profanity.

Write-in candidates cause a stir

'Dull' election ends with races

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

When the dust settled at the election on Saturday incumbent Adrienne MacCarthy and write-in candidate Lucia Flibotte had been elected to two seats on the School Committee. An election that was reported as an "election with no races" and that could have had a historic low turnout in last Friday's Mariner changed literally overnight.

"I think we elected two people who are very supportive of the schools."
— Ronnie McMorris, Doane Street

On Saturday morning there were two write-in candidates vying for votes — Leonora Jenkins of 198 Jerusalem Road and Lucia Flibotte of 27 Summer St.

Both campaigns were under the radar in the community until the day before the polls opened. The battle for write-in votes was likely the reason 1240 registered voters – or about 24 percent

Jenkins blasted in town-wide phone message

Voters told she would 'damage the schools'

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

In Cohasset on Saturday morning there was a chorus of ringing phones, as each household received a recorded message featuring the voices of then Selectman Rob Spofford and former Selectmen Ronnie McMorris.

The well-known names in town, Spofford in the waning hours of his selectman's term and McMorris a three-term selectman, expressed their joint opinion that write-in candidate Leonora Jenkins would cause "serious long term damage" to Cohasset schools. They asked listeners to "vote for Adrienne MacCarthy and write-in Lucia Flibotte."

Incumbent School Committee member Adrienne MacCarthy said that she had "nothing to do with the call itself or its content." However, she said in an email "this in kind donation benefited my campaign, it will report according to [Massachusetts General Law] under campaign finance within the 30 days of the election."

Candidates are required by law to report campaign expenditures eight days before the election, within 30 days after the election and, if funds remain, at the end of the year. As of press time, MacCarthy had yet to file.

When McMorris was reached for comment, she said the primary reason behind the phone message was to "inform people that this was a contested election." Spofford did not return repeated phone messages

Shoe Market Kids sale is all laced up

Shop to change hands May 1st

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

Friendly faces, quality shoes and a perfect fit are the trademarks of Shoe Market Kids located on Route 3A. When May 1st comes around those elements won't change, but the business owner will.

Mary Sease, owner of Shoe Market Kids, will hand over the shoestrings to longtime floor manager Kathi Yeager. Sease has decided to move out of retail and focus on a non-profit effort.

"I want my customers to know I'm leaving their feet in good hands," says Sease, who credits her loyal customers with making her business a success.

Her base customers are from the South Shore area, but stretch from New Hampshire to Cape Cod. Her online store (www.shoemarketkids.com) receives orders from all across the country, ranging from Southern states to California.

"Some customers come to the area every summer for vacation and we're one of their first stops," Sease says.

The colorful store has hundreds of shoe choices for all types of occasions and price ranges, from the popular Merrell slip-on shoe to the latest colors of girls' flats, Shoe Market Kids has a broad selection. The ship carries top brands like Stride Rite, Primigi, New Balance, Ugg and Timberland.

As Sease closes the shoebox on this part of her life she is confident that her business will flourish under Yeager.

"Her commitment is the same as mine — know the children, size them properly and create relationships," Sease says that she offered the store to Yeager because she had been with her for 10 years.

Sease's brother Greg Lagrotteria owns the Shoe Market, a shoe store formerly at Cohasset Plaza and now at

Road rage results in assault on woman

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

A male subject hit her in the face with a pocketbook and a female subject kicked her, police said.

A Hull woman was allegedly hit in the face and kicked following an apparent road rage incident that occurred in Cohasset last week.

Police said the woman who had three female passengers in the car went to Hull police. Hull called Cohasset police, who then escorted the women back to Cohasset where the report was filed.

Chief James Hussey said last Thursday at about 9:15 p.m., the women were driving along Route 3A in Cohasset when the jeep behind them kept flashing its high beams. At one point, someone in the jeep threw an object at the car with the four women. The female driver pulled over in the vicinity of Sohier Street to check for damage. The Jeep also stopped and two males and two females exited the vehicle, and threw the Hull woman to the ground. A male subject hit her in the face with a pocketbook and a female subject kicked her, police said.

The victim told Cohasset police that one of the males looked familiar to her but she could not identify him. However, the women were able to provide the Jeep's license plate number and the matter is currently under investigation by Cohasset detectives.

The woman, who had been checked out by Hull paramedics, sustained bruises to her face.

Accident

The driver of a 1999 Chevrolet pickup was charged with failure to yield to the right-of-way in an intersection after making a left-hand turn from Beechwood Street onto South Main Street last Friday (April 6) at about 11:27 a.m.

The pickup was coming out of Beechwood to make a left toward the village when it collided with a 2003 Chevy Trail Blazer traveling northbound on South Main Street. The pickup did not yield to the Trail Blazer and the accident occurred. There were no injuries and the vehicles were not towed, Chief Hussey said.

Barking dogs

Last week an anonymous caller wanted to speak to the Animal Control Officer about dogs that were barking all hours of the day and night in his Pleasant Street neighborhood. Chief Hussey said the caller's concerns were passed on to ACO Paul Murphy who will meet with the neighbor and talk with the dog owner. He explained that if barking dogs are waking up the neighborhood then that can be considered a nuisance and fall under "disturbing the peace." "We will use the information provided by the Animal Control Officer to make that determination," he said.

Dead body

A man who went to visit his friend last week called police to report that he thought his friend was dead. Chief Hussey said the man, who was in his 50s and was found slumped in a chair, had apparently died suddenly. There was no sign of injury and foul play is not suspected.

He explained the District Attorney's Office will have an autopsy conducted to determine the cause of death. "The death is not suspicious at this time," Hussey said.

Near miss

A caller reported last week that she was almost run down while using one of the crosswalks in the village. She described the car as being a red sports car. Police immediately put out at BOLO (Be On the Look Out) but could not find the car.

Chief Hussey said the town is looking into signage and other ways to make the crosswalks more visible.

Drunk driving

A 22-year-old Hingham woman was arrested for operating under the influence of alcohol at just before 2 a.m. on Sunday (April 8). Chief Hussey said an officer, who was at Route 3A and lower King Street, observed a silver-colored car pass by at a high rate of speed, estimated at 70 mph. The car was heading northbound. The officer pulled out behind the vehicle, observed it slow and swerve, and pulled it over on 3A.

While identifying the operator, the officer could smell alcohol and observed that her eyes were somewhat red and bloodshot. Investigation at the scene determined the woman was operating under the influence of alcohol and she was arrested and charged, Chief Hussey said. She was also cited for speeding.

Gas leak

The construction crew working on the Sohier Street grade crossing struck the gas main opposite 107 Sohier St. at about 10:30 a.m. on Friday (April 6). The fire department evacuated the area, checked the adjacent homes and stood by until Keyspan arrived and repaired the leak, Fire Chief Robert Silvia said.

Village will stand on its own

A new zoning district, setting apart the village area, got Town Meeting approval March 30. Article 14 outlined a proposal to establish the village as a district separate from the downtown district. The purpose of the article, according to Planning Board member Mike Westcott, is to call out the village as a separate group so future bylaws or bylaw changed can only apply to the village area.

Peter Brown of the Economic Development Committee spoke in favor of this article indicating that it anticipates changes to village bylaw in the future.

Martha Gjesteby of Old Pasture Road, noting the importance of zoning bylaw changes, challenged the quorum shortly before 1p.m. The count came back at 109 voters. Every zoning bylaw change requires a two-thirds majority to pass. Article 14 received the required two-thirds vote in favor.

With the village standing on its own, the downtown district includes three parts of town: a portion of the harbor area, the West Corner, and a small area in the Beechwood section.

Apartments by special permit

Shortly after the village district was established the first of, what some residents hope, are many changes was applied to the Village district. Town Meeting voters changed the bylaw that allows dwellings for more than one family (essentially, apartments) from a by right use to requiring a special permit.

Al Moore, Chairman of the Planning Board, explained that the change is almost a "moot point" because of the 40,000 square foot requirement for lot size. He said that by instituting a special permit requirement, each instance could be looked at on an individual basis.

(The Downtown Business District requires that in order to have a dwelling for more than one family, it must be on a 40,000-square-foot lot or larger).

Wayne Sawchuk, owner of 35-39 South Main St., made it clear that this change does not help current business owners or building owners.

"Honestly, I think we're going backwards. It made economic sense to have by right use," Sawchuk said.

A few residents, including Rick Flynn 30 Summer St., inquired what the bigger plan was for the village area concerned that the delay has put some village business owners are currently "in limbo."

"If it is not broken, don't fix it, but we don't know if its broken yet," answered Moore, saying that the village consultant would be able to examine the effect of apartments, "the bylaw is okay by right use but we would have to take a hard look at proposals."

According to Planning Board member Michael Westcott the village consultant has not yet been contracted but is in process, "we should have enough information to make decisions at the fall Town Meeting."

Capital Budget discussed in two articles

Town Meeting approved allocations for $155,000 in capital projects (Article 6). The Capital Budget Committee reviewed more than $1 million in requests, according to Town Manager Bill Griffin. The small amount of recommended projects is a part of a greater plan to get the town in better financial standing by limiting the amount of free cash expended.

The Middle-High School will receive two sums to address facility maintenance. The library will get repairs to window flashing that has caused leaks over the past two years. The total cost is estimated at $54,000. Repairs and maintenance of the track will be addressed with a $5000 allocation.

The DPW was authorized to buy at new diesel dump truck ($66,000) and a new construction and demolition scale ($30,000). Both items are expected to pay for themselves during their lifetime.

The Capital Budget Committee (CBC) also proposed the establishment of their own bylaw in article 12. Mark Baker, Chairman of the CBC, said the bylaw defines the role of the CBC and the projects that would fall under its purview. He said the CBC hopes to establish a more effective long range plan and be a larger part of the primary budget process.

Selectmen reorganize

When the five Selectmen met for their first meeting post-election on Monday, their first order of business was to nominate a new Chairman and Vice Chairman. Town Manager Bill Griffin requested nominations from the board.

Selectman Ralph Dormitzer nominated Gary Vanderweil to assume the position of Chairman. No other nominations were put forth and Vanderweil was unanimously voted to act as Chairman for the coming year.

Dormitzer then nominated Selectman Ted Carr as Vice Chair. The vote was unanimous.

Town Meeting and Election Results

The last two weeks have been packed with town business — from the 26 articles discussed and voted on at Town Meeting to the townwide election. If citizens feel they need to catch up on what has been decided, Town Manager Bill Griffin says all Town Meeting vote results and election results have been conveniently posted online.

Visit www.townofcohasset.org, the homepage contains a link to Town Meeting and Election results. The information will be available for the next couple of weeks, says Griffin.

Obtain certified copy of deed

Norfolk County Register of Deeds William P. O'Donnell would like to inform the public of an ongoing direct mail offer that is being sent to local homeowners. "Our office has received many inquiries from property owners who had received in the mail an offer from 'National Deed Service Inc.' to provide them with a certified copy of their deed for $59.50. The company, based in Washington, DC, according to their letterhead, states it will obtain a certified copy of your deed from the county office and forward it to you."

In an effort to prevent any homeowner from paying such an exorbitant fee for a service that is readily available locally, O'Donnell wants all residents of Norfolk County to know that a certified copy of their deed may be obtained from the Registry of Deeds, 649 High St., Dedham, from Monday through Friday during regular business hours of 8:30 a.m. to 5 p.m., at a cost of $1 per page. If you can't come to the office you can send a request by mail to the Norfolk Registry of Deeds. P.O. Box 69, Dedham, MA 02026. The cost by mail is $2 per deed.

People who would like to view their deed can go online to the Registry Web site at norfolkdeeds.org and look at their deed in the research section. More information is available at the Registry by calling the customer service center at 781-461-6101.

Incumbent Ralph Dormitzer stretches his legs while campaigning outside Town Hall on Saturday afternoon for his uncontested selectman's seat. Dormitzer and Paul Carlson were in a two-way race for two seats.

Town Election was Easy Street for selectmen, other candidates

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

For candidates outside of the School Committee race, this year's election was a walk on easy street — at least by Cohasset's standards. A resident filled each open seat without much campaigning or money spent.

A drive through Cohasset's neighborhoods in late March and early April there are usually signs galore supporting candidates for all town boards. This year, there were no colorful signs around here, in fact, passersby would not know that election day was fast approaching.

Yet, with the polls closed at 6p.m. on Saturday night Cohasset voters elected new configurations for town boards that will take on the challenge of running the town. Incumbent Ralph Dormitzer was re-elected to his Selectman's seat, while political newcomer Paul Carlson filled the other seat on the Board of Selectmen.

"The nicest part of all was not having to run an extensive campaign."
— Selectman Ralph Dormitzer

"The nicest part of all was not having to run an extensive campaign," said Dormitzer of his reelection. He indicated that he hoped the reason for no competition for a selectmen seat this year was citizens were reasonably satisfied with the effectiveness of the Board of Selectmen.

"As a selectmen you are very much identified with the decisions you make," he said, drawing comparisons to state level representative and national representatives where he felt the representatives are less personally recognized for their decisions and votes.

"You are very close to people's hopes and desires because they're your friends," he said.

Carlson is new to the board and to town politics and said he is glad to have the opportunity to serve.

"It's a great feeling [to win]. I've always been interested in doing something like this."

When he heard about the write-in campaigns for School Committee, he admits he was worried too. "Every candidate has to be worried," he said.

But both Dormitzer and Carlson ended up winners and attended Monday night's meeting of the Board of Selectmen.

Once the results were tallied, three candidates received more than 900 votes. Paul Pratt Memorial Library Trustee candidate Sarah Pease captured the most votes out any candidate with 914 votes. Stephen Bobo, longtime Board of Health member who was running for re-election, was close behind, receiving 912 votes. Another Library Trustee candidate Barbara Power garnered 911 votes.

The election drew 1240 voters to the polls; many of the ballots had write-in votes that had to be calculated separately. The tedious process took about an hour and half with Town Clerk Marion Douglas announcing the results to a crowd of about 20 interested citizens shortly before 7:30p.m.

Dormitzer and Carlson were present and were immediately sworn into office. School Committee incumbent Adrienne MacCarthy was on hand to be sworn in as well.

Selectmen undecided on cable franchising

Selectmen have been approached by a Comcast representative asking the Board to oppose state legislation that would allow Verizon to enter communities without going before the local government. The legislation proposes that the State grant Verizon a single state issued franchise agreement.

Town Manager Bill Griffin said that he recently attended a state conference where this issue was discussed and the overall feeling was this legislation would not be an advantage to municipalities. He indicated that the primary gain from this legislation would less delay in the process.

The legislation proposes that the State grant Verizon a single state issued franchise agreement.

Selectman Fred Koed said that there was a level playing field now and this legislation seems to tip in favor of Verizon. He indicated that he would be against the legislation.

Vice Chairman Ted Carr said he would contact a colleague and selectman in Waltham, whose Board has taken a position on the proposed legislation. Carr would also try to get a copy of the legislation for review in time for the next meeting.

The Board of Selectmen will further discuss this issue, and possibly take a position, at the next meeting.

Why do you relay? — "My mother had breast cancer when I was a young boy. I was not sure what was going on, but I knew my mother was very sick. She had a mastectomy that would prove to save her life. Cancer was something I have feared ever since. Then in 1999 my dad was stricken with lung cancer. After him having to take care of me, it was now my turn to care for him. I took him to his doctors' appointments, there I learned more about what we were facing. When the Dr. told us that the cancer had spread to his brain, I told him we would do whatever it takes to get through this. One day bringing him back to the nursing home he had been in and out of for a couple of months.

"On the way out of Hull, I turned into the parking lot at the end of the beach. It was a bright sunny day, I drove slowly, letting him take it all in, we both commented how beautiful the beach was that day. I'm glad to have shared that sight with my father that day. He never saw it again. I used to take that for granted, seeing it every day. Ever since that day, I cherish that sight every time. Since I have been involved in the Relay, my mother has battled and won twice against cancer. That is why I Relay, to help with the loss of a loved one, and to help with the life of another." — Jim Stanley

Derby Street Shoppes in Hingham. Both Sease and Yeager worked for five years at the Shoe Market before Sease decided to open Shoe Market Kids. Yeager followed her to the new store.

"Out of all the [employees] here, she has the relationship with the customers. She takes that extra minute with the customer," Sease, who also describes Yeager as someone who loves kids.

"When the girls walk in she's like the mother to them all," Sease says.

Sease approached her about buying the store about a year ago. They began discussing details seriously in the winter months.

"I said 'yes' right off the bat," Yeager says she is ready to plunge into the challenge of small business ownership. And this isn't her first time owning a small business; she was a young video rental store entrepreneur.

She ran a store in Pennsylvania until the big chains came in and she decided to get out of her lease.

Yeager will have the support of the current eight employees in her new endeavor, including master fitter Bob Combs. Combs was the proprietor of Combs Shoes in Scituate Harbor. He owned the children's shoe store for almost 40 years. Yeager says that the kids that Combs fit as kids are now bringing in their children.

"I want my customers to know I'm leaving their feet in good hands."
— Mary Sease, Shoe Market Kids

"I'm the flunky, that's me," Combs jokingly says of his four-day a week job at Shoe Market Kids, but Sease says that his reputation and personality have brought in a good portion of her customers.

"Grandmothers come in and they ask just for him," she says, Combs told Yeager she will be working eight days a week once May 1st rolls around.

In addition to having the support of the employees at Shoe Market Kids, Yeager also has the support of her family. Her sons, ages 12, 15 and 17, and husband will help with odd jobs. Her oldest son has already agreed to help with the trash and website.

Both the new and the old owners seem happy with the change. Yeager says she is excited at the challenge before her and Sease is looking forward to pursuing other interests.

"There's been too many good parts, it's a fun place to come and spend your day," Sease says.

From the Archives of the Cohasset Historical Society

The Cohasset Historical Society was delighted to receive this new addition to our archives. After seeing last week's column, Ann and Al Rose gave the Society this picture of the 1929 Cohasset High School baseball team seated on the front steps of the old Osgood School, which was located where the police and fire stations are today. We have been able to identify coach William Ripley, Jr., at the upper right and Harry Rose, second from the right in the front row. If you can identify any of the other players, please give us a call (781-383-1434) or stop by the Historical Society's headquarters at 106 South Main St.

If you have any photos from Cohasset's past please consider donating them to the Cohasset Historical Society. If you can't bear to part with your photos we would be happy to have them scanned so that a copy can be enjoyed by all. The Cohasset Historical Society is open Monday through Friday from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m..

Historical Society to host virtual tour

Cohasset Historical Society invites its members, guests and the community to join in the fun of a virtual tour of the "Architecture of Cohasset" on Wednesday, April 18. Historian David Wadsworth will conduct the tour from the comfort of the Pratt Building at 106 South Main St.

Wadsworth has added to his collection of slides especially for this presentation. Starting with the two oldest houses in Cohasset, and traveling to the present day, he will point out the style of home that was representative of different eras in the town's history. Cohasset is blessed with a wide variety of architectural styles including Georgian, Federal, Greek Revival, Second Empire, Victorian and modern. With his knowledge of the town and its history, Wadsworth will bring the past and present alive as attendees take this gentle armchair stroll down the streets of town viewing the various architectural styles.

The program will begin at 7:30 p.m., there is no charge and light refreshment will be served.

Historical Society dinner is April 22

Cohasset Historical Society will host its annual Spring Dinner Sunday, April 22, at Cohasset Harbor Resort, 124 Elm St. Guest speaker Linda K. Palmer will present a program titled "Where Did the Puritans Go." She will speak of the Massachusetts Bay Colony, life in America and the reasons for coming to America in 1630, as well as the cessation of migration in 1640. Palmer has a master of arts degree and a background in teaching both high school and university students.

The menu offers a choice of chicken parmesan with pasta or roast baby cod with rice pilaf. Cost is $31 for Historical Society members and $36 for non-members. Both members and guests are welcome. Jenkins blasted in phone message or an email.

"People would be very concerned about [Leonora Jenkins] being on the School Committee," McMorris said, "[Jenkins] waited for people to go away for the long weekend" to announce her write-in candidacy as a political tactic to take advantage of the expected low turnout election, she said.

McMorris explained that it was within Jenkins' right to do so, but it was also within someone else's right to do so as well. She also said that people were concerned about someone who didn't attend meetings or go out and meet voters, referring to balloted School Committee candidate Peter Richardsson.

"They were uneasy about a candidate and were looking for a familiar face," she said. Lucia Flibotte is that familiar face to McMorris and, seemingly, to the more than 600 voters that wrote in her name.

The "blast" phone message is a campaign tool used in elections on every political level — from a presidential campaign to a town election. The tool is used to distribute a campaign message to a determined group of households.

According to Selectman Ted Carr, Ronnie McMorris called him on Friday evening to ask about the service he used in last year's election. He said he referred them to a Leesburg, Virginia-based telephone technology firm, The Next Big Thing.

In a telephone interview, however, McMorris said she did not know the service that was used to distribute the message.

Mark Sump, a principal at The Next Big Thing did confirm that his company was used to distribute the message this weekend. He said the process is "pretty simple" to get a message out — an 800 number is dialed, the message is recorded and the candidate or organization needs to provide a list of households for message distribution. He said the process could take as little as five minutes.

"It's a very efficient communication tool, but it can be misused," Sump said, citing recent hotly contested congressional and senate races. Sump said that The Next Big Thing has distributed campaign messages for national and state campaigns from Maine to Hawaii. The charge is per household and although he would not discuss specifics, he said the service is "pretty inexpensive."

On Carr's campaign finance report filed with the Town Clerk last year, he listed a $225 in-kind contribution from The Next Big Thing.

The townwide phone alert systems were not utilized to distribute this message (see sidebar).

Transcript of town-wide message

Spofford: Good afternoon, this is Selectman Rob Spofford, the father of four school-age children.

McMorris: And former Selectman Ronnie McMorris, mother of three Cohasset graduates and one high school sophomore, calling with an urgent message about today, Saturday's election for school committee.

Spofford: Mrs. Jenkins, a longtime and outspoken opponent of the Cohasset schools, is running a write-in campaign for School Committee against Adrienne MacCarthy. Mrs. Jenkins' candidacy has been soundly rejected by Cohasset voters in the previous two elections and we both feel if elected she would cause serious, long-term damage to our school system. In a low, turnout election anything can happen. It is essential that you please vote in today's election in support of our schools.

McMorris: Vote for Adienne MacCarthy and write-in Lucia Flibotte of 27 Summer St. Voting is until 6p.m. at Town Hall. Your vote is always important but never more so than today.

Town reaction

When the phone message was delivered to Cohasset homes on Saturday, there were mixed reactions. Many wonder how this type of campaigning – a write-in effort that bypasses typical election procedures – may become a trend for Cohasset politics, other were disturbed by the negative tone of the message, and still others were propelled to vote upon receipt of the message.

"I wonder how it's going to change the face of traditional campaigning," said Pat Martin, former School Committee member and the mother of three children in Cohasset schools. She said the methods were "obviously very effective" and had little cost – monetarily or physically. Where typical campaigns involve public appearances, debates and cost, the write-in candidates did not need to go through that, she said.

Martin received the telephone message during lunchtime on Saturday.

"It let me know that [Flibotte] was a write-in candidate," she said and propelled her to vote for her. Her husband had gone to the polls in the early morning and had told her about Jenkins efforts as a write-in.

Selectman Ralph Dormitzer said that the write-in campaigns raise the question of why we can't have a dialogue out in the open. He felt that the

DENNIS B. SULLIVAN
ATTORNEY AT LAW, CPA

If you have a trust agreement, I have some bad news for you; your trust is probably outdated. Trusts drafted by many attorneys do not contain the protective provisions we included in our recently developed "Life Plan™". How do I know? Last year I gave numerous workshops throughout the state and will even offer $1,000 to anyone who can present an estate plan that contains all 19 of the protective provisions we currently use when designing a plan. Most estate plans had fewer than 3 of these provisions. Only one estate plan even came close to having all 19 provisions. Consider this…

THIS YEAR YOU ARE SIX TIMES MORE LIKELY TO BECOME DISABLED THAN DIE!

This alarming statistic shouldn't surprise you…you see it every day. Unfortunately, the number of people becoming disabled will double in the next decade. Your trust was designed to deal with death not disability, but that can be corrected.

A LAWSUIT IS FILED EVERY THIRTY SECONDS – MORE THAN 90 MILLION ARE FILED IN THE UNITED STATES EACH YEAR

Your trust can be modified to protect the surviving spouse's interest in the Decedent's estate from frivolous lawsuits. Currently, it is only designed to reduce estate taxes. Would you like it to do both?

ADVERTISEMENT

BECAUSE YOU HAVE A TRUST…
YOU MUST ATTEND THIS FREE WORKSHOP!!!

MOST POWERS OF ATTORNEY ARE OUTDATED WHEN PRESENTED (MANY ARE NOT EVEN AVAILABLE)

Your Power of Attorney is used to allow someone to act on your behalf when you are disabled. Unfortunately, these documents keep becoming outdated. The comprehensive version we previously used was revised in 3 major areas after the Terri Schiavo case. Assuming your document is current, will it be available in an emergency? Hospitals report in 3 out of 4 cases the Patients' Health Care Proxy is not available when needed. Our new program makes this document accessible 24 hours a day, 7 days a week via the telephone.

IN 2001, MORE YOUNG PEOPLE FILED FOR BANKRUPTCY THAN GRADUATED FROM COLLEGE!

The amount of assets that will be inherited by the next generation is staggering. Unfortunately, the amount our children or beneficiaries will lose due to financial difficulties such as bankruptcy, lawsuits and divorce will be just as staggering. If you could distribute your estate in such a way as to protect your children or beneficiaries from their creditors for life... would you? I would be surprised if you said no. After all, isn't that why your trust was created in the first place?

MOST ESTATES DON'T MAKE IT TO THE GRANDCHILDREN!

If you can protect your estate during the life of your children, then it will be available for your grandchildren. Wouldn't it be nice if your estate, whatever is left, could then transfer estate tax free to your grandchildren? It can, we just need to put the appropriate language in the document.

THE BIGGEST THREAT TO YOUR ESTATE IS NO LONGER PROBATE & TAXES…

IT'S DISABILITY, OUTDATED DOCUMENTS UNPROTECTED DISTRIBUTIONS…

DUE TO RECENT CHANGES, YOUR LIVING TRUST COULD BECOME A LIVING HELL.

Jenkins blasted in message

message was "wholly negative" – indicating who not to vote for rather than who to vote for.

He is concerned that this will affect the relationship the School Committee and Selectmen have built over the past year and the goals they have agreed to set their sights on, in particular the aggressive goal of making Cohasset Public Schools one of the top 10 schools in the state.

"I think we lost something in this election," he said.

School Committee member Steve Fusco said he "would prefer that people go through the normal process to get elected."

"I hope write-ins aren't a future trend, because I think the process is necessary and important," he said, but he is happy with the end results and looks forward to working with both MacCarthy and Flibotte.

Ronnie McMorris said the primary reason behind the phone message was to "inform people that this was a contested election."

The methods used to achieve the victory of MacCarthy and Flibotte did not sit well with Vice Chairman of the School Committee, Alfred Slanetz.

"These actions corrupted the democratic process and effectively disenfranchised the majority of voters," he stated in an op-ed piece he submitted this week, "the alleged 'pro-school crowd' has slashed opened and expanded old wounds which all of us on Town Boards have worked hard to heal over the last 12 months."

However residents feel about the write-in campaigns and blast message, it is clear that the effects of this election will be long felt by Cohasset.

Tasha peeks out from under an election booth while her owner, Ricki Carfagno, votes at the Town Hall last Saturday. The turnout which was expected to hover around 10 percent was closer to 24 percent due to last-minute write-in efforts.

Town calling systems not used, officials say

When residents began receiving the blast phone message, many residents thought that it may have been accomplished using the newly installed townwide reverse 911 messaging systems. Both Town Manager Bill Griffin and Superintendent Denise Walsh firmly said that neither the town nor the school's systems were utilized.

Connect-CTY is a internet-based town-to-resident communication service that enables town officials to schedule, send and track personalized voice messages to thousands of residents, businesses and local officials in just minutes, ensuring they all receive the same message quickly. The system can be used to communicate any timely and pressing matter, such as severe weather conditions, notification of a missing child, a water main break, or other unforeseen events or emergencies.

Griffin said that only a select few town officials have the ability to send a message with the system, and it requires an access code. The selectmen have not been trained to use the system, only the police chief, fire chief, emergency management, Water Commission and town manager.

When the system is used, it automatically generates a report for the town manager detailing the number of calls made, how many were live answered, how many went to voicemail, etc, Griffin explained. He said that no report was generated over the past weekend.

The Connect-ED system has been used for school announcements, emergency information, and parent reminders, like upcoming MCAS testing, Walsh said. The Superintendent, Technology Director and principals have access to the system. The messages are transmitted to all student and staff households.

School Committee member Adrienne MacCarthy, who the blast message benefited, says that "as an elected official, I would never have put my town or schools in jeopardy using publicly funded resources," like the Connect-CTY and Connect-ED systems.

OPINION

Dirty pool

Saturday's election will go down in the history books for all the wrong reasons.

For one thing, there is a new position in town: Former Selectman.

Former Selectman Ronnie McMorris thinks it is perfectly OK to use that title when delivering a hateful town-wide telephone message whose purpose was to scare people into voting against a fellow citizen.

But when questioned about the message, she either "doesn't know" or says she is a "private citizen" and that we need to quiz the candidate.

Then outgoing Selectman Rob Spofford, who — with little more than 24 hours left in office — was readily available on a holiday weekend to lend his voice to the "urgent" message, is now unavailable to the press. Repeated phone calls to his office and one to his home went unreturned and we started Monday morning.

We can only guess that Spofford, who was so forthcoming over his many years of public service, is now a "private citizen" and yes, a "Former Selectman."

We can only hope that Lucia Flibotte, who benefited most from the 11th-hour effort and was out of the country, did not endorse the phone call. We can only hope that her intent in seeking a spot on the School Committee is to serve the entire town while doing what is best for Cohasset kids given all the challenges. We hope she will be fair and open. We want to be optimistic the School Committee will become more transparent in conducting its business with her on board. Flibotte needs to rise to the occasion and try to bridge the raging divide created during last year's override campaign that was ripped back open on Saturday.

However, with stealth write-in campaigns being conducted in a parallel fashion that were so secret that neither camp knew about the other, we can only think the worst. The Libotte and Lee Jenkins camps are at philosophical, polar opposites. Yet both decided to win-at-all-costs by capitalizing on a low-turnout election. They shared an ends-justifies-the-means strategy that disenfranchised the electorate.

Neither candidate had to address the issues, debate or be held accountable. Jenkins' views are more widely known because she has run twice before in recent years. Nevertheless, how can depriving voters of the election process be a positive thing?

One of the "emergency" emails sent around town stated that Flibotte had an "epiphany" at Town Meeting – an internal calling if you will, to serve. Too bad that revelation did not occur in January when nomination papers were available.

Literally pushed aside and trampled upon was candidate Peter Richardsson, who got an unfortunate lesson in the worst of Cohasset politics. He was suddenly labeled as "anti-school." Will someone define that for us, please?

We are disappointed that Adrienne MacCarthy, who clearly benefited from the Flibotte effort, has not condemned the hush-hush nature of both the Jenkins and Flibotte campaigns and disavowed the phone message. In an email to the Mariner she stated the message sent out was done so through "private citizens" but that she would report it because it helped her campaign.

In the interest of full disclosure and transparency, we would ask MacCarthy and Flibotte to immediately publish who paid for the message, how much it cost, and whether a PAC (political action committee) was formed on their behalf.

The actions of Spofford and McMorris denigrated the office of selectman. The phone call was undignified, especially coming from two people with such long legacies of public service.

We can only hope that Flibotte apologizes to Jenkins and Richardsson, on behalf of her negative campaign. We can only hope that MacCarthy would join her.

After Saturday's debacle, what the future holds for Cohasset elections and open government is anyone's guess.

We can only hope the Cohasset School Committee has not indeed become a club in which anyone who does not fit the profile, need not apply.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Gracious in defeat

TO THE EDITOR:

I just wanted to thank everyone who supported my recent campaign for the school committee. This was a wonderful experience, and I cannot imagine a better way for someone fairly new to town to meet so many of their neighbors. Cohasset is lucky to have so many residents of great passion, talent, and ideas. My family and I are blessed to live here.

My only concern is how in the world I am going to explain to my mother, who has run several successful campaigns, that I lost an uncontested election to a candidate who wasn't even in the country at the time. My only regret is that somehow people formed the impression that I was "anti-school."

MacCarthy grateful for support

TO THE EDITOR:

As I take a deep breath and ponder on the events of this past weekend, I still have a hard time believing, I have been reelected to the Cohasset School Committee. Although, I believed, I would return to the school committee due to an uncontested race, at 6pm, Friday evening all that changed!

As I have done many times before, I called upon a strong group of school proponents for their show of support and like many times before, they truly rose to the occasion. The mobilization of some of our finest Cohasset Public School proponents was nothing short of amazing! Our schools are fortunate to have such caring, concerned and conscientious supporters.

As I stood by my car, it was refreshing to see some old friends roll into the polls and it was twice as refreshing to see and meet many new faces, along with their little ones, come out and vote.

The democratic process is amazing and it was great to see so many value their vote this past Saturday. I thank each of you who took the time to cast a vote for me so that I might continue my work on the school committee. I look forward to serving our community through our Cohasset Public Schools.

Thanks to Cohasset Fire Department

The following is a copy of a letter sent March 29, 2007, to Chief Robert Silvia expressing thanks for the response from the Fire Department to a call for help in the early morning hours of March 17:

Dear Chief Silvia,

I am late in sending you this letter, but I just want to acknowledge the professionalism that was shown on Saturday, March 17, at 5:30 a.m. I had a problem in my house and was hard pressed to fix it. I figured I couldn't call my plumber at that time. So I called your department. Lieutenant Randy Rosano and Firefighter, Jay Fiori arrived at my house within five minutes of my call.

I think it is a huge benefit to Cohasset that we have people that are so capable and understanding. They are there when we need them. We don't realize how lucky we are until we have a problem. This is the second time your department has helped me. And I thank you for that.

Cohasset citizens urged to 'Step It Up!'

COMMENTARY

EVAN DEUTSCH

I am writing to urge the citizens of Cohasset to take part in the "Step It Up 2007 National Day of Climate Action" taking place this Saturday, April 14th.

Step It Up 2007 is the most extensive organized climate change event in history. Groups from all 50 states will partake in this call out against global warming to bring awareness to this very real and urgent issue.

From a gathering on the summit glaciers of Mt. Rainer, Wash. to a scuba diving action in Key West, people from all walks are taking part in this grassroots movement. There are currently 1305 organized events across the country.

While the planned actions are incredibly diverse, they are all attempting to achieve a common goal of convincing Congress to push the United States to cut carbon emissions 80 percent by 2050. As pointed out by the event website, stepitup07.org, this is less than a 2 percent reduction per year, making this a very feasible goal.

One of the most appealing aspects of this National Day of Climate Action is the accessibility of the events. With 115 actions in Massachusetts alone, this event will be difficult to miss.

In fact, our Town of Cohasset, in conjunction with Hull, Scituate, and Hingham, will host the "Windmill to Windmill Step It Up 2007" event. Citizens from all four towns will walk and bicycle to Hull Wind Two (Hull's second wind turbine) to kick off the event. Then, the group will continue on to Hull Wind One for a picnic and a free screening of Al Gore's "An Inconvenient Truth" at Hull High School. At the conclusion of this event, volunteer drivers will offer to transport participants back to their homes.

For those looking for other local event opportunities, both Quincy and Milton will hold events, while Boston and Cambridge are both hosting several organized actions. The opportunities are widespread, so I encourage Cohasset citizens to find an event that most appeals to them.

This occasion presents a tremendous opportunity for our town to take part in this groundbreaking day of action. As a community, we hold a responsibility to make a stand against climate change and to take immediate action to save our planet.

Democratic process undermined

COMMENTARY

ALFRED SLANETZ

The behavior of these individuals and others on Election Day demonstrates a shameful lack of integrity, ethics, character and sense of fair play.

As parents we teach our children about the importance of integrity, grace, fairness and good sportsmanship. Our School reinforces these values and a strong educational system is critical to the success of democracy as an educated citizenry can disseminate truth from falsehoods. Unfortunately, in last Saturday's election for the School Committee, our democratic process was so corrupted by secret, last-minute write ins and negative character assassinating campaigns, that 80 percent of our voters were disenfranchised and a legitimate candidate was falsely discredited.

Last January, Adrienne McCarthy and Peter Richardson announced their intention to run for School Committee. They got their 70 signatures, wrote answers to questions every week in the Mariner, and went to meetings with different constituencies to communicate their positions on different issues to the voting public. Other people including Mrs. Flibotte were asked at that time if they wanted to run but they declined. However, at some point approximately a month before the election (Mrs. Flibotte) and approximately a week before the election (Mrs. Jenkins), two candidates decided to run as write ins but to keep their intentions secret until election day to avoid public scrutiny and capitalize upon a projected low voter turnout.

Peter Richardsson moved with his wife and family three years ago with two young children, one of whom will be starting Kindergarten at Osgood next year. As I understand from his wife, he decided to run for School Committee so that he could assure great schools for his children and the children of Cohasset. Even though the race was uncontested, he answered the questions in the Mariner and went to the various campaign functions. Additionally, he helped out on the PSO telethon to raise money for the Cohasset Schools.

However, on Election Day a vicious negative campaign of phone calls and emails began to make sure that "Pro- school people" would know that there was an "emergency" and they had to vote. To quote an e mail by Terry and Donna Green: "two anti-school candidates" were running and people should go down to Town hall and vote for Adrienne McCarthy and Lucia Flibotte if they "cared about our schools". This campaign included the active support of Lucia Flibotte as a write in candidate by one of the two candidates on the ballot (sitting School Committee Chairman, Adrienne McCarthy), a phone call from a sitting selectman and former selectman (Rob Spofford and Ronnie McMorris) and email messages from multiple members of the PSO, the very organization for which Peter Richardsson raised money.

These actions corrupted the democratic process and effectively disenfranchised the majority of voters. Voters either didn't know that there was a contest on election day (80 percent of the people) or were sent provocative and misleading information about certain candidates without any time to verify (the other 20 percent). Furthermore, this misinformation was spread without giving a candidate, who had played by the book, the chance to set the record straight. While all citizens should exercise their democratic right to vote, how can a democracy work when the information that an election is a contest is only disclosed to subgroups and the true positions of all candidates on each issue are not publicly disclosed to all voters before the election?

The behavior of these individuals and others on Election Day demonstrates a shameful lack of integrity, ethics, character and sense of fair play. Their behavior is disgraceful; an embarrassment to our Town and an attack on democracy. I hope that people realize that whenever someone says that another is "pro" or "anti" anything it is probably a distortion of the truth unless it is verified by the person who is being accused. However, in this case the voting public was denied the time and the information to come to a well informed decision.

The alleged "pro-school crowd" has slashed opened and expanded old wounds which all of us on Town Boards have worked hard to heal over the last 12 months. Furthermore, as a sitting member of the School Committee, I would like Mrs. Flibotte to support her post election comment in the Patriot Ledger, that the current School Committee, under the chairmanship of Adrienne McCarthy, is not dedicated enough to our schools. Let my record speak for itself. For someone who did not run a campaign for election it is apparently easy for Mrs. Flibotte to hide behind rhetoric.

Last Saturday sets a dangerous precedent for future elections and raises still one more barrier to recruiting candidates to run for public office. Ironically, by being divisive those who have labeled themselves "Pro-school" are likely to have reduced the probability that the School will garner the resources that it needs in future elections. What kind of town do you want: one where we calmly and respectfully debate the issues and work together or one where hatred/shameful acts of divisiveness prevail?

A hallmark of character and an educated person is ethical behavior and a sense of fair play. An educated public enabled with the intellectual skills and information to make well informed choices is a pillar of democracy. At the very least, I believe that the candidates and the disenfranchised voters deserve an apology.

Alfred Slanetz is vice chairman of the Cohasset School Committee.

Life under the Big Top

TALES FROM THE FAR SIDE OF PERFECT

DIANE K. DANIELSON

Thinking that my brief moment of insanity might be misinterpreted by authorities, I opted for a different approach.

Last week marked my son's and my annual pilgrimage to the Big Apple Circus. Now, I'm really not sure why he needs to see the real thing when everyday at home he's got ringside seats to watch Mommy star as juggler, tightrope walker, roadie, ringmaster and yes, even chief clown. But, it's become a family tradition. This is somewhat surprising, as our first venture to the big top was anything but enjoyable.

Four years ago, I had been working around the clock on the final manuscript for my first book. However, I promised my son to make it up to him one Friday with tickets to the circus. At 5:45 p.m. that evening, as I'm bolting out the door to get him from daycare (late, of course), I glance at the tickets I've had for three weeks now and suddenly realize that they were for a show earlier in the day.

By the time I arrive to pick him up, I'm in complete Mommy meltdown mode, wracked with guilt over breaking a promise to my little guy, and distraught over having my carefully laid plans derailed. His reaction? "That's o.k., Mommy, accidents happen." (Who is this child? I could certainly not have given birth to someone who didn't understand the extent of this utter disaster and my total failure as a mother.).

I did manage, however, to come up with a new set of tickets for the very last show of the tour. When that Sunday came, I was determined for it to be the best circus day ever. I tried to ignore the fact that he fell asleep in the car five minutes before we arrived, our seats were obstructed view, he hurt himself climbing on the collapsible chairs, and he had a tummy ache from eating too much junk food. So, when my son announced just before intermission that he was ready to go home now, it was all I could do to keep from screaming, "Over my dead body! I worked hard for these tickets and you're going to stay and enjoy yourself even if you're miserable!"

Thinking that my brief moment of insanity might be misinterpreted by authorities, I opted for a different approach. Hoping he would change his mind before we left the circus grounds, I suggested we make a pit stop at the port-a-potties next to the tent. Little did I realize that the concept of an outdoor potty that doesn't flush is absolutely fascinating to a three-year-old boy. Needless to say, we had to personally check out each and every one of the 15 port-a-potties before we could leave. (Now I was the one feeling nauseous and wanting to go home.)

Did my son enjoy our day at the circus? According to daycare the next day, he raved about it. Of course there were no funny clown stories or tales of daring trapeze artists, but he did tell them in extensive detail about the non-flushing potties.

Now, whenever we go to the circus we joke about whether we should just skip the show entirely and hang out by the bathrooms. Yet, I can't help but be reminded how easy it is to get so wrapped up in managing the three ring circuses we live in that we forget to stop and smell the roses … or in my son's case … the port-a-potties.

Diane K. Danielson is a Cohasset resident who has actually never dreamed of running away to join the circus, but she has been known to sport a clown nose on occasion. For more of Diane's random musings visit her blog at www.womensDISH.com.

Earth Day could be the best ever

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Cohasset must develop a collective conscience about litter.

Last week, two members of Cohasset's Girl Scout troop, Jennifer Curley and Megan Richardson appeared before the Board of Health to tell us about their plans for Cohasset's annual Earth Day 2007 cleanup. The entire Troop would provide support. Plans include a poster campaign, recruitment of parents, signs around town – the works! For Cohasset, Earth Day has become a well organized happening.

All agreed that the best day for the event will be Sunday April 29th with a rain date of May 20th .

Last year, the town amassed more than 60 people from several organizations; whole streets provided volunteers as did the Center for Student Coastal Research, the Cohasset Maritime Institute, and many individual volunteers. More than 10 truckloads of trash were brought to the Recycling Transfer Station, sorted and taken away.

As the amount of roadside trash from thoughtless people continues to grow, so does the recognition that, as a town, Cohasset must develop a collective conscience about litter. Public, private and volunteer groups can only do so much to stem the tide. Surely some of the trash comes from out-of-town contractors heedlessly tossing stuff and, if found, these will be dealt with harshly, but much is of our own making.

Pet problems — For example, dog droppings: The Town has issued licenses to 574 dogs. However according to Animal Control, there are many more. It's very comforting for those who walk in Town to see folks walking dogs with a MutMitt and plastic bag in their hand; sort of a badge of honor. The Board of Health maintains MuttMitts in at least five places in Town with the Trustees of Reservations maintaining them at Wheelwright Park and Turkey Hill. Other places where they can be found are Town Hall, Parker Avenue, Government Island, and at the Aaron River Reservoir. The MuttMitt station at Sandy Beach alone has to be refilled about every six days. The Board of Health pays for MuttMitts and the Animal Control Officer provides regular replacement.

Recycling — The National psyche seems to be for people to throw away perfectly workable, usable stuff; none of this 'Use it up; wear it out' thinking. More like 'Gee, it's turned a little gray; replace and then throw it away'. In areas of plenty it's natural to do so, but until the lines of supply adapt to an ever more massive, precise and selective recycling economy, there will be places where discarded trash builds up; where there's not much oversight and the pile seemingly grows spontaneously.

The Plan — With the Scouts and BoH support, it's the buildup places that will receive the most emphasis in this year's campaign. Primary focus for the cleanup will be near and around schools, Government Island, Black Rock Beach, the dune side of Sandy Beach, the Ball fields along North Main Street, Ellms Meadow near Cushing Road and James Lane, the Jerusalem Road/Bow Street area. If you organize your own group, it will be provided with trash pickup service. Bring all trash to a central place and inform the organizers of the location. The DPW will identify it for pickup.

Primary Staging — Primary staging area will be at the Town Hall parking lot at 12:30 p.m. for assignments to coordinate and establish trash pickup sites and give ground rules. Cleanup duration should be until about 4 p.m..

The Board of Health will provide a limited number of attractive Free T shirts on a first come, first served basis.

Come to the Town Hall parking lot at 12:30 on Sunday April 22 and help us make this the best Earth day in Town history.

DOG NUISANCE

Oh yes, provisions of the current BoH Dog nuisance abatement regulation, whose purpose is to abate the potential health danger in public places of fecal material from dogs, are as follows:

•Any person who owns, possess, cares for or controls a dog shall take every precaution to not permit his or her dog to defecate on any sidewalk, street, parking lot or any other public place. Further, the above pertains to private property not owned by the above person.

• It is the responsibility of any person cited above to promptly remove any fecal matter deposited on a public place or on private property not owned by that person and properly disposed of.

No lobsters? Say it ain't so!

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

I'm afraid I have bad news for the gourmets among you.

Lobster may be off the menu this summer at your favorite seafood restaurant. That or you'll have to take out a small loan to pay the tab, be it fra Diablo, newberg or just plain broiled live. There just aren't that many lobsters in New England waters.

The men and women who brave the elements to bring the tasty crustaceans to your table say the wholesale price of lobsters off the boat has soared to nine or eleven dollars a pound, which is about what they used to charge retail at Haddad's.

"It's the highest I've ever seen it," said Dave McMahan of Thomaston, Maine, who has dropped his pots in the water for 36 years. "It's a funny year."

Then the tourists discovered the delights of donning a bib and cracking a claw and, of course, the price went up…

But it's anything but funny to the guys who run the seafood restaurants.

"I hate to say it but we've added a surcharge on the lobsters," said Bill Coyne of Boston's Union Oyster House, which already has been forced to raise the price of lobster three times in 10 days.

"The problem now is you can't get them. I actually had to place all my orders on Thursday to get me through Monday because they have to go out and search for them."

The craving for lobster is a comparatively new phenomenon.

Maine is the best known producer of lobsters in the nation but prior to 1880 only six towns in Maine had lobster fisheries and the census that year showed that only 200 men were engaged fulltime in pulling lobster traps.

Then the tourists discovered the delights of donning a bib and cracking a claw and, of course, the price went up and fishermen noticed how little it cost for a small lobster boat and traps and an industry was born.

Strangely enough, the earliest settlers of these parts regarded the lobster, not as a tasty seafood to be served only at such events weddings and witch-burnings but as a trash fish fit only to slop to hogs. They only got in the way of real fish, like cod and mackerel.

Three years after the Pilgrims landed at Plymouth, Governor William Bradford was complaining that he had only lobsters to serve to his visitors "without bread or anything else but a cup of fine spring water."

Thomas Morton, he who made merry at Merrymount, wrote in his memoirs, "New English Canaan":

"Lobsters are there infinite in store in all parts of the land and very excellent. The most use that I made of them in five years after I came there was but to bait my hook for to catch bass."

Later on, Morton found a better use for his lobsters.

"The country doth afford such plenty of lobsters and other delicate shellfish; and Venus (the goddess of love and fertility) is said to be born of the sea."

In modern English, he learned to view lobster as an aphrodisiac. Feed them to those Indian maidens while they danced around the maypole and WOW! His were the days before Viagra, of course.

MacCarthy, Flibotte elected to School Committee

— came to Town Hall last Saturday. Due to the lack to races for any elected board, the voter turnout was predicted to hover around 10 percent.

In Town Clerk Marion Douglas' tenure, since 1987, she does not recall a write-in candidate ever overcoming a balloted candidate, which is exactly what Lucia Flibotte did to candidate Peter Richardsson. What makes this scenario even more interesting is that the community-at-large was not aware of the winning write-in candidate until the day of the election. Jenkins intent for a write-in campaign was announced to the public on Friday when a short article was placed on the Mariner website around noon.

Both write-in campaigns took advantage of a holiday weekend (when many families were away) and an expected low turnout election.

The strategic, which at times pushed the limits, campaign at the 11th hour by a group of private citizens supporting Adrienne MacCarthy and Flibotte seems to have propelled them both to victory. Posters were placed throughout the town in the morning – at Stop & Shop and at the Bancroft soccer field.

The sign at Bancroft soccer field, according to Douglas, should not have been there. The field and parking lot is town property. Campaign signs are allowed on town property only if a supporter is holding the sign. This sign, with the slogan "save our schools!" was nailed to a sawhorse and red, white and blue balloons were tied to the fence. The sign indicated to "re-elect Adrienne MacCarthy" and "write-in Lucia Flibotte, 27 Summer St." At 6:45p.m. the sign was still at Bancroft field, with no supporter in sight. It is unknown whether a supporter had been there earlier in the day, but the sign was not removed when, if ever, supporter(s) left the soccer field.

When a concerned citizen brought this to the attention of the Town Clerk and police on duty around 7:30p.m., they said that since the polls were closed and the ballots counted there was nothing that could be done. If the presence of the sign had been brought to their attention earlier, they said it would have been removed.

Signs placed around town in well-trafficked areas were only part of the campaign. Flyers were placed on the windshields of vehicles at Stop & Shop and soccer fields. MacCarthy acknowledged this piece of the campaign and a townwide "blast" phone message at the polls on Saturday (see related story).

"It was done by citizens that are concerned about the schools. It just goes to show how passionate they are. They know what we need for the schools and it's not Mrs. Jenkins," she said. She indicated that she felt Jenkins write-in campaign was an attempt to unseat her from the School Committee.

She arrived at the polls at 7:15a.m. in order to get the "best spot," the parking space closest to the polls and Town Hall. She stood out next to her vehicle all day, answering questions and conversing with voters. In addition to requesting a vote for her, signs on her car appealed for a write-in vote for Lucia Flibotte. A table with cookies and candy has stickers and flyers for the MacCarthy/Flibotte campaign.

Jenkins, who has recently undergone eye surgery, was at the polls on and off on Saturday. She said in an interview last week that she "definitely would have run for School Committee" has it not been for her health issue.

"My intention was to send a message to School Committee leadership," Jenkins said post-election. She says that under MacCarthy's leadership (as chair and as a member) she believes money is not being appropriately spent and the kids are missing out on opportunities.

"It is important to give our students the opportunity to participate in programs such as Robotics, Model UN, High School science fair, pilot engineering curriculums and core courses that are readily available to our students' peers in surrounding districts," she said in a statement to the Mariner along with thanking her supporters.

The Jenkins camp set up on the Town Common across the street from MacCarthy's car. Jenkins was asked several times not to campaign within 150 feet of the doorway. A sign also had to be adjusted because it was free-standing on town property, the group corrected the problem once recognized.

However, at the end of the day it was MacCarthy and Flibotte that were announced the winners at approximately 7:30p.m. MacCarthy received 885 votes while Flibotte garnered 630 votes. Peter Richardsson was third with 384 votes and Jenkins brought up the rear with 289 votes.

Lucia Flibotte was in Italy on family business in the days leading up to the election. Her husband, Mark Flibotte, said that she felt "very honored" at both the voter turnout and the amount of votes she received.

"She wasn't surprised that a school opponent, for lack of a better word, decided to run," he said, "but she's excited."

Lucia Flibotte has been involved with the PSO for many years, she has been a room mother for her children's classrooms and helped out with Christmas concerts, Mark Flibotte said. He talked about a project that she completed along with MacCarthy to have a playground built for the Osgood School from private funds.

Mark Flibotte said she walked away from Town Meeting with many concerns, particularly "anti-school sentiment" she felt from people around her. The idea was bounced around in the coming week and when she left on the Wednesday before the election, she was expecting a low-level write-in campaign effort.

"I think I can best describe her approach as as grassroots as you can get," he said of her mindset when she left, indicating she and her supporters planned to offer an alternative to Richardsson, "but that took a dramatic turn on Friday."

Ronnie McMorris of 89 Doane St. is satisfied with the outcome, calling Flibotte a "familiar face" for the schools.

"I think we elected two people who are very supportive of the schools," she said on Tuesday.

"Mrs. Flibotte is a parent of five kids…she's been actively involved in the schools, never missed a town meeting," she said, explaining that she was disappointed that Richardsson did not attend Town Meeting on March 31st or any previous School Committee meetings.

"It's too important, too critical a time to let someone on the board who doesn't have the same zeal, the same zest for schools," MacCarthy said, "it's all about the kids, if we [the town] let it go then it will take years to rebuild."

Richardsson who has two young boys under the age of five pulled papers back in January and describes himself as "a committed parent." He has been a member of the Economic Development Committee since 2005. He appeared on the PSO Telethon recently playing the guitar to the tune of the pre-school staple "Wheels on the bus" with his son's class. He said in an interview previous to the election that he hoped to bring a "sense of unity" to the committee.

Richardsson said that he attempted to attend a School Committee meeting back in March, but the meeting failed to draw a quorum and could not be called to order. The School Committee meets twice a month and Richardsson's schedule did not allow him to attend the other meetings.

"I don't think the town is particularly well served by re-litigating a past election," he said this week in a phone interview, "My campaign was about looking forward, and I hope to have the opportunity to serve the town in the future."

MacCarthy and Flibotte will take their seats at the next meeting of the School Committee on April 25.

Write-in candidacy procedure

In Cohasset, ballots with write-in votes must be counted separately. The corresponding ballot oval, next to "write-in" must be filled in and the name of the write-in must be a legitimate resident. Accurate spelling and street address are needed, however, the Town Clerk and registrars will determine to the best of their ability the intent of the voter. Town Clerk Marion Douglas said that write-ins such as "Mickey Mouse" would not be counted as legitimate.

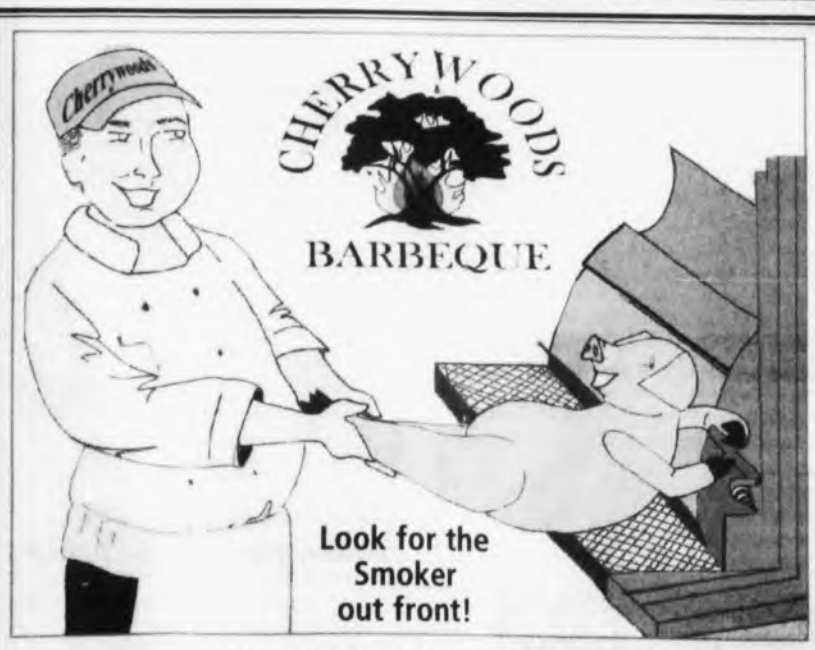
Stickers may be placed on the ballot instead of writing out a name, but the corresponding ballot oval must be filled in as well. Write-in votes are counted for the office where the name is written or sticker placed, so voters must be careful to place the name in the appropriate section.

As far as campaign finances are concerned, a write-in candidate must adhere to the same regulations as a balloted candidate. According to Town Clerk Marion Douglas, if a candidate spends less than $500 of their own money, then they are not required to file with the Town Clerk. But, if more than $500 of their own money and/or receive campaign finances from another person or outside source, they are required to file with the Town Clerk eight days before the elections, within 30 days after the election day and, if all monies are not utilized, at the close of the year.

The only candidate to file a pre-election report with the Town Clerk was Selectman candidate and winner, Paul Carlson.

Political Action Committee

According to Massachusetts Office of Campaign Finance website, Political Action Committees (PACs) need to be created when are two or more citizens or an established group raises or spends money to support or oppose one or more candidates, based upon stated principles or interests. PACs concerned with candidates in a specific city or town file with Town Clerk.



Dennis Kennedy of the Office of Campaign Finance said that ideally this filing should be done before action or expenditure is taken. The process to form a PAC is a single sheet form. The establishment of PACs allows the source of funds for a campaign to be transparent and available to the public.

As of press time, no PAC for this year's election has been filed at the Town Clerk's office.

PHOTOS/NANCY WHITE

The sun was setting on the election and still this campaign poster at Bancroft soccer field stood tall. According to election law, campaign signs are prohitied from town property unless a supporter is holding it. Town Clerk Marion Douglas said had she been aware of the poster before the polls closed she would have had it removed.

COMMENTARY

DEBBIE COOK

I just returned several weeks ago from the Atacama Desert in Chile, where every single day, I felt like I was witnessing the proverbial canary in the cave relating to global warming.

Wow! I don't know why I was reading about the new super-fast, powerful 35-foot sport fishing boat in a large daily newspaper, but something in the headline extolling its performance intrigued me. I'm not a fisherman or a powerboater, but I guess I was taken by the three-275 horsepower engines that could get you to the Vineyard and back all in a day. I read how the boat was such a hit at the Miami International Boat Show that 11 models were sold in the first four days of the five day show. What a fine show of American ingenuity, know-how and engineering.

But wait, as I read on, there seemed to me to be a darker side to this story. One sentence said the boat had a cruising range of 450 miles — well, okay, that would definitely get me to the Vineyard and back and then some. But another sentence later in the article said the fuel capacity was 400 gallons. So I put my high-level math skills to work, and realized with a start that the much-ballyhooed boat actually got little more than ONE MILE PER GALLON.

Now I don't mind that the owner of the boat will have to spend $1200 more or less to fill the boat for his 450 mile jaunt, but I guess what gets me is the pure waste of it all. To me it's the moral questions. Is it right to have our young sons and daughters dying in Iraq, ostensibly fighting terrorists, but realistically trying to stabilize the region so gas continues to flow? And what about the environmental impacts? All that gas has to be combusted. It has to be burned to power those three 275 horsepower engine. There are by-products created when gas is burned. Some people call them greenhouse gases.

I, for one, am very concerned about those greenhouse gases. I just returned several weeks ago from the Atacama Desert in Chile, where every single day, I felt like I was witnessing the proverbial canary in the cave relating to global warming. We took a tour to see the famed Chilean flamingoes, who have lived in salt-water ponds for 11,000 years. Our guide told us they wouldn't be there in 10 years with the unprecedented evaporation of the lakes. We took a tour to the high planes lakes at 13,000 feet at the base of the Andes. These lakes are home to the indigenous Andean Coot. Our guide, (not the same one) said the lakes were evaporating so rapidly that they would be gone in 10 years. She said, " You're lucky you came now, because the Andean Coots who nest in the lakes near the shore, but away from the foxes and coyotes are dying." The reason - their nests are no longer surrounded by water, and the foxes can pick them off with no problem.

We stayed in a little town, San Pedro de Atacama. The owner of the quaint hotel where we stayed told us the town, which had ruins of human habitation dating back 5,000 years, wouldn't be there in 10 years. The reason — no water. Apparently the water was disappearing from the Andes, due to the melting glaciers, so San Pedro's water supply wasn't being recharged by the normal seasonal flow.

San Pedro de Atacama has more tour operators per capita than any other place on earth to show the hordes of tourists the sights and sounds of life in the desert. Could be their days are numbered. Climate change could be putting them out of work, because all the attractions people flock to see will be gone. So I have a thought — perhaps we can bring the tour guides over here and put them to work leading fishing expeditions on a 35-foot boat powered by the equivalent of 825 horses.

Road race, supporters shined

TO THE EDITOR:

I would like to take this opportunity to thank all the organizers of the Road Race By the Sea. I started trying to get ready for the race about 12 weeks ago. I didn't think I could do it. I am about 60 pounds overweight and had never run before. I live in Virginia, but my father lives in Cohasset. So my goal was to be able to complete the run. I did it. My time wasn't great, 1:19:47, but I never quit.

Thank you to all that helped and cheered everyone on. Thank you Brad for listening to me on Sunday night when I was still so pumped up that I could not shut up. Thank you Danny for jumping in and giving me the encouragement and company that I needed to finish. To whoever was playing the "Rocky" theme on Forest Avenue – thank you! I was ready to start walking, and then I heard it and knew that I would make it! And to my Dad, out of all the runners on Sunday, I finished ninth from the end, but you made me feel like I had won the gold medal at the Olympics.

To some people I feel certain that my accomplishment will seem trivial, however, to me, I now know that every day as I put one foot in front of the other I will reach new goals. I hope that as I continue to run in different events, they will all give me the feeling of accomplishment and pride that the Cohasset Road Race did.

Wind turbine for Cohasset

TO THE EDITOR:

I can think of nothing better than installing a wind turbine on town property. Although the total cost of installation and the machine itself will not be cheap, in the long run, the savings will be substantial.

Our next-door neighbors in Hull, after installing their first turbine, have reduced the high school's electric bills in their town by 28 percent, saving the town over $21,000.

Also, the particular turbines that Hull purchased have a "life expectancy of 20 years." If the turbine does last 20 years and saves the high school $21,000 every year, then throughout the turbine's life, the town will save almost half a million dollars. For Cohasset, these savings could support many town activities; they could possibly reinstate middle school sports or go toward high school sports.

Because a turbine does not have the possibility of being discreet, a perfect place is to install it would be next to the water tower in the woods. Moving towards natural energy defines our town as one that cares for the environment and one that is are finally using the resources around us to our advantage. Using wind to provide energy for our town is a great idea that we, as citizens, need to insist upon and not give up until we have a turbine here in Cohasset.

Donate to Dana Farber

TO THE EDITOR:

April is that month. Crocus around here are nearly done, daffodils and forsythia have been handed the baton. Kids in school are counting down again, not just to April vacation, but many just can't wait for their last day of HS ever. Shorts were pulled out a while ago, then just as quickly, the winter coat pulled out again, hopefully the last hurrah of this cold windy winter.

April though has much more meaning than the weather, the blooms, and even plans for summer vacation. Last April was when we all lost something very precious to us. The hockey team lost a player, a fan, a friend for life. CHS found itself with an empty student's desk and chair and one less smile and a great laugh. The old neighborhood was short one street hockey player. And the computer where he sat, had no one to turn it on any longer, and just seemed so lost without him. Only the new memorial garden gained, a dubious honor.

This April, please donate to the Dana-Farber and their innovative cancer research program. Checks made out to DFMC can be sent to 42 8th Street, Unit 5411, Charlestown, MA 02129. On-line donations can be managed by visiting www.dfmarathon.kintera.org and selecting 'support a runner'.

Your generosity is appreciated, your kindness overwhelming.

Thanks from the Cohasset Maritime Institute

TO THE EDITOR:

Cohasset Maritime Institute would like to thank Town Meeting voters, the Community Preservation Commission, the Board of Selectmen, the Historical Commission and the Advisory Board for their support and approval of the request for CPC funding for improvements to the CMI/Mariner's Park Boathouse.

The CPC funding supplements the volunteer donations of time and material made to CMI over the past 12 years in the preservation of a town asset. The funding provides for professional, preservation-quality improvements to the facility, CMI/Mariner's Park Boathouse, at a standard well above the work that students and volunteers have done up to this point. The improvements are to the structure and serve to protect a town and historical resource. The CPC funding does not provide assistance to CMI's programs, membership and/or function.

CMI is a non-profit community-based rowing and maritime education program. Our mission and programs are open to the Cohasset community and any family or individual that cares to share the rowing experience. CMI exists for and because of the community. New members are always welcome and we invite you to join us. Sunday, April 28 is sign up day at the boathouse.

Our web site, at www.rowcmi.com, also has all the sign up forms and information that you need. If you have any questions, feel free to call any of the board members listed below. And if you have any suggestions or comments as to how CMI can better serve the community, please let us know.

Thank you again for your support. We look forward to rowing with you.

Principal Gauley resignation accepted

Deer Hill Principal Keith Gauley resignation was officially accepted with "gratitude and sadness" by the School Committee last week. His last day at Deer Hill will be June 30. Supt. of Schools Denise Walsh has already outlined an "aggressive" time line to find a replacement. She said that it would be ideal to have a new principal in place by the close of the school year.

Gauley has accepted a position of elementary Principal at Eddy Elementary School in Brewster, MA. His letter indicated that he "did not anticipate leaving Cohasset after four years" but extended sincere thanks to the Superintendent, parents, community and Deer Hill students.

The School Committee thanked Gauley for the "key role" he has played in the development of the Deer Hill School and wished him the best of luck in his new position.

Strikeouts doom CHS baseball against Abington

By Eric MacCarthy
CORRESPONDENT

The Cohasset High baseball team had their home opener Monday against defending South Shore League champion Abington, a team that returned seven varsity starters.

With a bad day at the plate, Cohasset struck out a combined 17 times which led to its 11-8 loss.

In a very ugly start to the game, the Skippers committed two errors, hit a batter, allowed two walks, and gave up four runs on just one hit; all this coming in the first inning of work from junior pitcher Brian Hill. With another run in the third, Abington went ahead 5-0 and things were not looking good for Cohasset.

Hill, who has been known for past first inning struggles, was eventually able to settle down for the next three innings.

"He pitched reasonably well, but he has to learn to overcome first inning struggles as a pitcher," offered Cohasset head coach Al Gallotta.

Despite giving up nine hits, four walks, and hitting two batters, Hill was still only charged with five earned runs.

Gallotta said that one positive he can take out of the game is the fact that his team never quit. Cohasset was able to battle back over the next three innings as Hill pitched shutout ball. Once again led by junior first baseman Kenny Muir, who had a single, a double, and three runs batted in, the Skippers were able to overcome the early deficit and take a 7-5 lead after five innings.

Not only did Hill pitch well over those three innings, he also helped himself out by driving in a run and getting two hits.

Unfortunately, Cohasset would be unable to keep their lead as Abington scored five runs in the top of the sixth to take an 11-7 lead, a dagger to the Skippers. Cohasset did have an opportunity to get out of the inning unharmed when a tailor-made double play ball was hit with one out and a man on first.

If played right, Cohasset would have got out of the inning still with the lead, but the ball was misplayed and bobbled; eventually leading to Cohasset's collapse.

After a strong performance to start the season, the Cohasset High girls lacrosse team has hit a speed bump in its last two games.

The Skippers' top goal this season was to match the record of last year's 14-win campaign, and they got off to a good start with a 12-6 win over Cape Cod Academy last Wednesday.

But subsequent losses to Weston (12-6 on Saturday) and Hanover (11-5 on Tuesday) have left Chuck Jaffe's team with a 1-2 mark going into the April vacation break.

"It's not panic time," Jaffe said Thursday. "We just need to re-adjust our expectations, figure our where our problems are and go from there."

There were few problems in the CCA game, a contest that wasn't as close as the score would indicate. Senior Lindsay Durkin scored the first five goals of the afternoon, and a solid effort from senior goalie Aisling Guinee was more than enough to make that good start stand.

Jaffe said Guinee has been a bright spot so far this season.

"She's been a very pleasant surprise to start the season," said the second-year coach. "But we need to get her more support."

That support was needed in the loss to Weston, particularly in the second half. After falling behind early, Cohasset managed to pull within one before the halftime whistle. From there, however, Weston – a Div. 2 North finalist last season – took advantage of some subpar play from the Skippers to dominate the second frame.

At the team's next practice, the players were required to run nine sprints the length of the practice field and back, per Jaffe's "checklist" philosophy. The team has a checklist of

CHS boys rebound from season opening loss to record 2 straight wins

The Cohasset High boys lacrosse team improved its record to 2-1 defeating Hanover 12-5 at home on Tuesday afternoon.

Cohasset exploded out of the gate with an 8-1 first quarter and never looked back. The Skippers were led again on offense by the junior attack duo of Mark Flibotte and Mike Grimm – aka "The Summer Street Connection" - both of whom had hat tricks before the first period ended.

Flibotte finished the game with five goals and two assists, while Grimm had three goals and four assists. Senior attackman Chris Davis (thre goals) added his second hat trick in as many games.

Head coach Stew Curran was pleased with his team's effort, saying, "The boys got it for the better part of the game today. It was as strong a first quarter of lacrosse as I have seen the CHS kids play. We had a strong attack, good ball movement, backside cuts, unselfish looks and some excellent face-off work. The defense kept the penalties down. Our clears and goalie play were again very good."

Davis started the Cohasset onslaught with a wrap-around goal dodging from behind. Grimm scored the second goal on a nice feed from Flibotte. After a Hanover score, senior co-captain Dan Trendowicz, returning to action after missing the first two games, scored on a laser to the bottom corner after a feed from Grimm with the man advantage.

Flibotte scored after a scramble in front and then PJ McCaw found Grimm alone on the crease. Flibotte and Grimm connected again twice with each assisting another goal by the other. Flibotte ended the first quarter scoring unassisted on a roll dodge from behind.

Hanover came out in the second quarter determined to slow down the pace of the game. Hanover went to a deliberate ball control offense and at times a zone defense. The strategy worked as the teams played the final three quarters even, trading goals the rest of the way.

In the second period, Flibotte scoring unassisted and Davis buried a shot after cutting from behind on a quick feed from Jeff Brown. Grimm found Flibotte again on a backside cut in the third period and also assisted on the final Cohasset goal scored by Davis in the fourth. Nate Porter was immense in the goal for Cohasset.

Porter had 12 saves, including a number of showstoppers. Time and time again, Porter turned away the Hanover attack including, two point-blank shots at the start of the third period and three at the beginning of the fourth.

Curran liked what he saw at midfield with the return of nine areas of the game in which they are expected to perform equal to or better than their opponent, with one of those sprints waiting for them at the next practice if they don't make expectations.

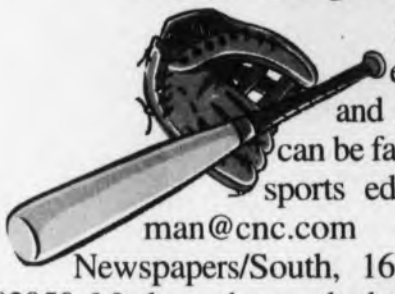
That message didn't seem to stick, however, as Hanover's Colleen Mulligan scored eight goals to lead her team to victory on Tuesday.



"We played better in some aspects," Jaffe said about the Hanover game, "but we had a significant case of the dropsies. We could not string more than two or three passes together."

The Skippers have some time to figure things out, as their next game is not until the 24th in Abington. Thursday's (April 12) game with Hingham has been postponed until May 9.

One positive Jaffe did stress is the performance of his top seniors, Durkin, Guinee, Caren Garber, Lara Novak and Kara Wilcox. That quintet ranks as Cohasset's top-5 so far in ground balls.

Durkin (12 goals, one assist, 13 points) and Wilcox (3-4-7) rank as the team's top scorers so far.

Cohasset's PJ McCaw battles for a face-off late in Tuesday's win over Hanover.

Trendowicz.

"Trendo, PJ McCaw and Chuck Czerkawski played very well today, particularly in the defensive zone," he said. "Andrew Smith and Andrew DiPaolo showed they can play excellent midfield defense and were a big part of the team's success. All of our middies played strong, tough positional defense and pushed Hanover outside the shooting zones."

Czerkawski and McCaw also dominated the face-offs, winning the ball 16 out of 21 times. Curran also singled out the continued stellar play of his goalie.

"Nate Porter stood on his head out there for us today and commanded excellent clears," said the coach.

Cohasset now breaks for school vacation week, but the boys will continue to work hard at practice on needed improvements. They return to game action against the always-tough opponent, Marshfield, at their facility on Friday, April 20.

Cohasset 14, Hamilton-Wenham 3

Cohasset got its passing and transition offense into high gear on Saturday morning at Alumni Field with a dominating 14-3 victory over Hamilton-Wenham. The Skippers were led by Flibotte (five goals, two assists) and Mike Grimm (four goals, two assists). Davis added three goals in the victory.

Flibotte took over the first quarter, scoring the first two goals of the game on nifty dodges from behind. After an H-W goal, McCaw found Flibotte cutting from the backside again. Flibotte scored his fourth goal of the game before the first quarter ended on a nice feed from Grimm.

It was then Grimm's turn to take over in the second period. Defenseman Bobby Meikleham started a textbook fast break with a pass to Peter Ernst, who quickly found senior co-captain Mike Bunstein who in turn found a streaking Grimm for the goal.

Grimm scored the next goal on a jump shot from the left slot into the upper deck of the cage. Sophomore midfielder Andrew DiPaolo found Grimm open in front of the goal on another fast break. Grimm buried the shot low after faking high on the H-W goalie. A minute later, Grimm found Flibotte again alone on the crease with the man advantage and Cohasset led 8-1 at halftime.

Davis kept the Cohasset offense flying high into the second half scoring after picking up a rebound in mid-air from his own shot. A hard-cutting Davis scored again after a precise feed through traffic from Flibotte. After two H-W goals, sophomore midfielder Andrew Smith scored his first goal of the year assisted by Flibotte. Grimm quickly followed with his fourth tally of the game unassisted after a whirling dervish dodge from the top through the H-W defense.

After an aggressive ride, sophomore Conor Murphy scored his first varsity goal on a scramble in front of the cage. Davis netted his hat trick after a fast break run and beautiful pass from senior co-captain Ryan Kucinski to end the Cohasset scoring.

The Cohasset defense was as dominant as its attack.

"Meikleham, Kucinski and Brown were excellent on clears and in the transition game, particularly after defensive takeaways," Curran said. "Our defense never let H-W get untracked and they got the ball to our attack quickly after forcing turnovers."

Nate Porter had another solid game in goal with 12 saves even though much of the game was played in Cohasset's offensive zone. Freshman Jack Murphy saw his first varsity action in goal during the fourth quarter and made four saves.

Curran said he saw some of the improvements in his team that he was looking for after its 7-6 season-opening loss to St. Sebastian's, and was able to get some significant playing time for his bench and even varsity minutes for some JV players.

"Our passing game was much improved today and we made the most of our possessions," Curran said. "Flibotte and Grimm have been playing together in the backyards of Summer Street since they were seven years old. Each has a good sense of the other on the field and they are a tough offensive duo along with the leading playmaker and the very fast, Mike Bunstein, it creates many options for opposing defenses to consider.

"We will continue to work hard to get better on both sides of the ball."

St. Sebastian's 7, Cohasset 6

In a disappointing start to their season last Wednesday, the Skippers dropped theri season opener 7-6 to St. Sebastian's (ISL Prep League) on a muddy field in Needham. The game was marred by the field conditions and penalties, including two illegal stick calls (one on each team). Cohasset never got its passing offense untracked and play seemed sloppy throughout.

Cohasset jumped out to an early lead when the St. Sebastian goalie (who played a terrific game) had a clearing pass roll of his stick into his own goal after a save. Brown, playing at long stick middie, made it 2-0 Skippers with a nice dodge and shot to the upper corner.

St. Sebastian's stormed back with three unanswered goals, including two on back door cuts with the man advantage. Bunstein scored unassisted on a strong drive to goal to tie the score. Grimm then gave Cohasset the lead with a beautiful roll dodge by his defender and a left-handed shot into the lower corner. St. Seb's answered to tie the score at halftime.

St. Sebastian's took it to Cohasset in the third period with two quick goals at the start including a man-down goal after the St. Seb's attackman beat a Cohasset double team. Cohasset continued to play hard and Brown scored again unassisted at the end of the period to bring the Skippers within range.

The Summer Street connection cashed in on a man-up advantage early in the fourth period to tie the score. Grimm found Flibotte on the side of the crease with a quick pass and Flibotte buried the shot. But it was not to be – St. Sebastian's scored the game-winner midway through the fourth quarter and held off a determined Cohasset effort to the final buzzer.

Curran found much room for improvement in his team's performance.

"We did not possess and protect the ball and were very impatient in our offense. Our passing needs to be crisper and we need more movement of the ball," said the coach. "Our man down defense needs to stay in position, not over-commit and prevent that back door option. On the man-up, we did not get the scoring opportunities we should have and went too quickly to goal."

Still, there were a few bright spots. Porter was outstanding in goal with 14 saves, including two spectacular stops at point-blank range in the first half.

"Porter played terrific and really kept us in the game," Curran said. "He was smart in the clearing game and very confident in the cage."

The defense also showed signs of better things to come with Brown, Jake Cuneo, Conor Holway and Kucinski aggressively stripping the ball from the St. Sebastian attack on many occasions. Curran was also pleased with the way his attack and midfielders rode hard in the clearing game, particularly in the first half.

"This team can be a very good team, but we showed too little patience on the offensive end against a solid, disciplined St. Sebastian team that shows how important ball-control can be," said the Skippers coach.

Brown (two goals, one assist) and Grimm (goal, assist) led the Cohasset scoring.

Lifeguards needed

Cohasset Swim Center is accepting applications for Lifeguards and Water Safety Instructors for the 2007 summer season. All applicants must be at least 16 years of age and hold current Lifeguard/CPR/First Aid certifications.

Letters of interest should be sent to Cohasset Swim Center, P.O. Box 132, Cohasset, MA 02025. Anyone interested in employment and enrolled or planning to enroll in a Lifeguard and/or WSI are encouraged to apply. Employment will depend on successful completion of the course.

Cohasset Recreation offers USCGA Boating Safety Course

United States Coast Guard Auxiliary and Cohasset Recreation Department will sponsor a two-session Safe Boating Course, offering certification by both the Coast Guard and the commonwealth of Massachusetts.

The course will be offered to both youth and adults; however, certification in this course is mandatory for those 16 years old and younger who wish to operate any horsepower craft. This course is an initial requirement for the process of obtaining a Launch Operators License. USCGA instructors will teach the two-session course, which will take place on two consecutive Saturdays, May 12 and May 19, from 9:30 a.m. to 1 p.m., at Paul Pratt Memorial Library, Ripley Road, Cohasset.

To register, call Cohasset Recreation Department at 781-383-4109 as soon as possible, as the class will be limited by size, and participants will be enrolled on a first-call basis. There will be a $45 per person fee for this program, which covers the cost of the textbooks and class materials. The fee will be payable at the first class, and checks will be payable to the Coast Guard director.

While the class is designed for children/youth and adults, it is suggested that children age 12 and younger be accompanied by a participating adult. A segment of this class will be devoted to the new laws regulating personal water craft.

State certification cards will be issued and most insurance companies will offer insurance rate discounts to those completing this course.

This was still not Cohasset's biggest issue throughout the game. At the plate, Cohasset struck out 17 times, meaning Abington only had to make four outs on their own. Thirteen walks given up by Abington pitching was what kept Cohasset in the game for so long.

"It was just a poor day, offensively" said Gallotta of his team's performance.

Cohasset will be faced with bigger challenges this year, though, as they will continue to battle for that tournament bid.

"If they thought those three Abington pitchers were strong, well, there's a lot better pitching in this league," said Gallotta.

Therefore, these Skippers are going to have to step it up if they hope to make in to the tournament. Their next challenge will be away at Carver, another tough opponent.

Kenny Muir as been a standout at the plate for Cohasset through the first two games.

Girls youth teams open strong against Duxbury

A few blocks away from the Cohasset Road Race on April 1, the town's young women were running the fields of Deer Hill in six home games against teams from Duxbury and Norwell, and coming away winners in five out of six contests.

The Cohasset Blue 15-and-Under team (grades 7 and 8) started the day against Duxbury 8a and got into a hole early. Whitney Jaffe answered Duxbury's first goal, but the visitors scored the next two and had the momentum as the opening period reached its midway point.

Jaffe blasted one home to close the gap, and Kelsey Erler finished a feed from Alison Whelan to knot things at three. After Duxbury regained the lead, Erler scored again – this time on a set-up from Caroline Fein – and when Duxbury captured the lead for the fourth time in the half, Anna Michalowski scored her first goal of the season to send the team to the break tied at 5.

Cohasset dominated the start of the second half. Jaffe finished her hat trick, Michalowski scored her second, and set up Erler's third goal of the day. Fein – an 8th grader playing in her first-ever game – then took advantage of her speed and a Duxbury mistake to score her first goal and make the count 9-5 for the home team.

Two Duxbury goals made it look like the seesaw was about to tip again, but Fein fed Whelan for her first score of the season, and Michalowski answered two late Duxbury scores by becoming the third Cohasset girl to complete a hat trick on the day. Ellie Tedeschi came up big in the net down the stretch, stopping two point-blank shots in the final two minutes to preserve the 11-9 win.

Next on the field, with was Cohasset White 15-U against a much weaker Duxbury 7 team. Sage Stebbins opened the scoring, and Kaci Kucinski and Lindsay MacNaught made it a 3-0 game before Duxbury had taken its first shot. Olivia Murphy used a quick-stick to slam home a looping feed from Christina Healy to make the score 4-1, and Kucinski expanded the cushion just before the halftime break.

The second-half was a back-and-forth affair. Stebbins opened the second-half scoring, with her second goal of the day equaling her entire output from the 2006 season. MacNaught finished a Kucinski feed to restore the cushion after two Duxbury goals, and a late score from Allie Farren closed out the home team's scoring, more than enough for goaltender Stephanie Brierly to close out an 8-4 Cohasset win. Brierly made 7 saves on the day, several down the home stretch where it looked like Duxbury might get back into the game.

At the 13-U level (grades 5/6), the White team had six different girls score goals to start strong with a 6-3 win over Duxbury 5. Six different girls tickled the twine for Cohasset: Kristen Alexander, Maddie Curley, Lexa Grasz, Hope Kissick, Katie McCabe and Suzanne Reichardt. Maggie Ernst just missed her first-ever goal when she blasted a shot off the goalie's helmet.

Cohasset controlled the action for most of the game with Eliza Murphy and Molly Fitzgerald scooping several ground balls each and making pinpoint passes to move the ball into the Duxbury end. Alexander was outstanding on defense in the first half before moving to a midfield position, and Caitlin Mavilia twice thwarted Duxbury scoring opportunities by playing solid defense in the critical scoring area in front of the cage.

Goaltending duties were split by Curley and Grasz, with each making several saves to keep Duxbury at bay.

The Blue 13-U team thought it was an April Fool's prank when the girls learned they'd be facing Duxbury 6, an all-sixth-grade squad, for their opening game. South Shore Lacrosse League rules discourage dividing teams in any uneven fashion, but the visitors made no bones about putting all of their older players on one squad, and that showed over the course of the game.

After falling behind early, Cohasset rallied to tie the score at 3 at the half. A strong defensive performance from Isabella Flibotte helped to key the team's offensive chances, leading to goals from Isabelle Dunne, Lexa Grasz and Katie McKenna.

Maggie Littlejohn, playing her first game in goal against perhaps the best team Cohasset Blue will face all year, posted several tough saves and cleared the ball effectively.

In the second half, Duxbury's offense poured it on. Molly Fitzgerald (borrowed from the White squad) did a great job in goal, stemming the Duxbury onslaught. Unfortunately, she was matched by a strong performance from Duxbury's goalie, and the visiting team was able to amass a lot more shots.

Mariel Teague and Maria Buckley scored Cohasset's two goals in the second half.

Cohasset's middie lines played hard and well throughout the game led by Kate Bodner, Flibotte, and Teague. Other middies who put in strong performances were Kylie Coffman, Christina Tedeschi, Katie McKenna, Dunne, Kathryn Dunn, Grasz and Gabby Weissman.

Three brand-new lacrosse players – all playing in their first-ever game – contributed throughout; Kelsey McCunney, Abby Carrier and Abby Slanetz all flashed signs of solid potential futures in the game.

It wasn't enough to stop Duxbury 6 from taking home a 10-5 victory, but the girls can expect improvement and better results from here.

Cohasset Youth Lacrosse's girls team return to the field on April 15 in games against Hingham.

ASP Journal

Many hands, many hammers make light work.

'I had the greatest first year'

...make plans for Saturday night, April 28 at the Appalachia County Fair at the St. Anthony Parish Center.

ASP is the Cohasset Appalachian Service Project Group, about 200 volunteers who, every summer, return to Kentucky, Tennessee and West Virginia to repair homes and to grow as individuals. These are the on-site stories of our Cohasset high school volunteers. After the long trip down,

The Real Work Begins — "Things are going well workwise. So far we've 'wrapped the house' putting up T1-11, added a trim, and insulated the inside walls. The girls have been working inside while Tris and Chris are great 'Siders' and Jeremy does a great job caulking. Eddie supervises. And the best part is our family. Kids everywhere – we're having a lot of fun with them. — Student Volunteer

"We did lots of stuff today. We cut wood to size to make into different things later. We took the wood we cut and made railings for the porch below and the scaffolding above. It looked fantastic. The spindles had to be cut square. We used the Chop Saw. It took a while to learn the tool but it was worth it. We accomplished a lot to day. As we were driving off, the family's father sat on his new porch and smiled at us." — Student Volunteer

"Barret, T-Bone and I were out back re-enacting the trench digging as previously seen in the First World War, deepening our holes from yesterday to 24 inches, below the frost line." — Student Volunteer

"Jon went to clutch a bag of cement and a big puff of cement blew up in his face. The look on his face was priceless. 'Ugh.' was all he said. I must have laughed for 10 minutes." — Student Volunteer

"Lara, May, Michalicious, Jack and Mary worked on shingling the roof. John and I made some serious progress on our bathroom ventilation hole with our big boy toys and bulging muscles." — Student Volunteer

The Good, The Bad and The Smelly— "Trying to set concrete piers while under a house on one's stomach is painful. However, the puppies make everything better, they're adorable and follow us everywhere: Feisty (mother), Buddy/Little Feisty, Twix, Milky Way, Cinnamon and Hershey." — Student Volunteer

"Today I went under the house with Greg and dug a hole. Other than that it was hot out but under the house it was nice and cool." — Student Volunteer

"Today I had to go under the spider covered foundation to dig an enormous hole with my hoe-matic. Things were going well until we were getting high off the fumes of 356 puppies that live and pee under the house. But we managed to dig 24 inches and nothing went wrong so it was good." — The aforementioned Greg, Adult Group Leader

It's All Worth It — "Today was our last day working and being with the family. Meaghan, Oby and I painted the house the whole day. It was fun painting the house – and my pants and boots. We said our good-byes to the family and it was really sad. The mother wrote the sweetest note to us. I almost cried. I had the greatest first year and can't wait for next year. — Student Volunteer

Look for the ASP Journal each week for the next few weeks, and make plans for Saturday night, April 28 at the Appalachia County Fair at the St. Anthony Parish Center. Dinner by Redbones BBQ, Music and Dancing by The Gr8fls, Silent and Live Auction. Tickets are available through Cohasset churches, or by contacting Rev. Gary Ritts, 718 383 0345, gar@2ndcc.org

Deer Hill School to host Gala Art Opening

Deer Hill School will host a Gala Art Opening Wednesday, April 25, at 7 p.m. This art show titled "Favorites 2007," represents the artwork of all Deer Hill students. Each student has chosen his/her favorite artwork of the year to be included in this exhibit. There will be refreshments and music. All are invited to attend. Admission is free.

In addition to the art show, Deer Hill will be celebrating the grand unveiling of a permanent clay installation created by Deer Hill fifth grade students and special "guests." The school will also be celebrating the hanging of the newest courtyard mosaic, weather permitting, honoring the Red Sox.

For more information on this event, call Ann Berman, Deer Hill School art teacher, at 781-383-6115.

Hurray! April vacation is here!

LIFE AT CHS

MICHAEL CORRY

Your sons and daughters are probably showing signs of burnout, and some time off might be just what they need to recuperate.

The Third Term is over, and April Vacation is here! Maybe a week off will curb the student body's appetite for sun and fun until the summer break. Your sons and daughters are probably showing signs of burnout, and some time off might be just what they need to recuperate. On the other hand, a taste of summer could do them in. Let's hope for Door No. 1.

The blossom that is next year's plans is in full bloom for most of the class of 2007, while the incoming seniors of '08 have started perusing the wide selection of bulbs to choose from. Sure enough, this time next year they will have seen some of their seeds flower, while others never sprouted.

Enough verbose symbolism, let's move on from flora to features. Here is the news for this week.

• Kudos to Kevin Barber, the 12th-grade winner of the 2007 Will McDonough Writing Contest! This contest is open to students across New England. Mrs. Berman has all of her students enter this contest. Kevin and a guest have been invited to an Award Ceremony at the Garden to receive $100, a free tour of the Boston Sports Museum, dinner in the Premium Club, and finally tickets to a Celtics game.

The following students were published in the most recent issue of Teen Ink Magazine: Chris Ackley, Haley Haracz, Rob Brady, and Laura Campedelli. Congratulations to these writers for being published in this prestigious nation-wide magazine!

The Spinnaker came out today, so be sure to get your hands on a copy! What's the latest gossip in the Scuttlebutt? Who are the Athletes of the Season and Team MVP's? Find out in the Spring Issue of the Award-Winning Spinnaker!

• Monday Mr. Welch and Mr. Willis took their History classes to the Museum of Fine Arts in Boston.

• The Swim Team Boosters met in the Library Monday night.

• Tuesday morning the Superintendent's Administration Council met.

• The Relay For Life Committee met Tuesday night.

• A new knitting group in the Middle School had their first meeting Wednesday after school. Mrs. Cisneros will be advising the students, and anyone who has an interest in knitting should talk to her to find out when the next meeting is!

• Wednesday the Social Service League of Cohasset presented Seniors the video "Choices" to the Senior Class. The video was created by the Steverman family to educate graduating seniors about the lessons learned after the death of their son and brother, P.J., in an alcohol-related tragedy 11 years ago. Also, a presentation for Parents was held Tuesday night.

• Jazz Night was held in the Upper Lobby Wednesday night, featuring the George Farrell group and the CHS Jazz Ensembles.

• Thursday morning the PSO President's Council met.

• Department Heads met Thursday after school.

• The Diversity Committee met this morning in the Library.

Well, it looks like the next week will give both students and teachers some time apart. Parents: don't get too down; we'll be back in school in a week. Sorry, teach'—we'll be back in school in a week.

And I'll see you in two. Get all that built up tension out, and enjoy the break. Cheers.

Tennis tournament for Children's Hospital

Save the date for the annual Cohasset Tennis Tournament, a mixed-doubles tennis tradition that began in the 1950s and continues today to benefit Children's Hospital. This year's event kicks off on Friday, July 13, with the annual dinner auction at the Lightkeepers residence. The tennis tournament, which takes place on private courts throughout Cohasset, is set for the weekend of July 14 and 15.

This charity tennis tournament was originally started by Jesse Cox and her neighbors in the 1950s. It has since grown to include hundreds of players, from lifelong Cohasset residents to newcomers. The tournament also brings together a wide array of tennis abilities, from those who dust off their rackets once a year to those who are passionate about the sport. In the past eight years alone, about $100,000 has been raised for Children's Hospital.

For more information about the tournament or to be added to the email distribution list, contact Corey Axelson at gallella63@hotmail.com.

Unicorn Singers to perform

Unicorn Singers will perform two challenging works in their upcoming April 13 and 15 concerts. Both of these pieces are rarely performed, and promise the audience a hour-plus of wonderful music.

Francis Poulenc's "Gloria" features contrasts between joy and introspection, with solo soprano moments and a bravura piano accompaniment.

Director Margo Euler is pleased to be highlighting 12 of the ensemble's 24 voices in solo or solo quartet roles for this event. Singing major solos are: Carol Cybulska of Kingston, Anne Briggs of Duxbury, Amy Martin of Scituate, Dawn MacGarvey of Duxbury, and Denise Rachel of Norwell. The ensemble draws dedicated and experienced singers from Hingham, Cohasset, Weymouth, and Hanover, as well as those towns already mentioned.

The concert will be performed at House of Prayer, 916 Main St., in Hingham, on Friday, April 13, at 8 p.m., and Sunday, April 15, at 4 p.m. Tickets are $15 at Noble's in Hingham Square or at the door.

PSO hosts annual telethon

Students in Mrs. Shabo's class in the preschool program at Osgood sing the "Wheels on the Bus" with accompaniment by Peter Richardsson during the fourth annual PSO Telethon and Talent Show held last month in the high school auditorium.

The Cohasset PSO Telethon is a live event which runs for more than two hours with a star-studded talent show that simultaneously entertains, informs and raises the much needed funding to enrich the public school curriculum. The telethon was broadcast on local Comcast TV channel 22.

Cailey Hart, 10, entertains the audience with her Irish Step Dance during the talent portion of this year's telethon. The event was televised live with callers phoning in their tax deductible contributions.

Chris O'Grady, 16, waits for his cue to perform during the annual PSO Telethon last month. The event is the flagship fundraiser for the Cohasset Parent School Organization.

Madeline Curry, 11, sings and plays the guitar during the annual PSO Telethon.

Police Chief James Hussey gets motiviated for running the Cohasset Road Race by the Sea by reading "The Last Pick, by Boston Marathon Race Director, Dave McGillivray and co-authored by Cohasset resident, Linda Fechter.

Road Race by the Sea: final chapter in town-wide read

Race director Brad Goodwin and his brother, Ron Goodwin of Goodwin Graphics, are both enjoying their copies of "The Last Pick."

Cohasset and the Boston Marathon have a common bond this year. For eight weeks, residents were encouraged to read "The Last Pick," by Boston Marathon Race Director, Dave McGillivray and co-authored by Cohasset resident, Linda Fechter. The grand finale of "One Book One Cohasset" was held Sunday, April 1, at the 31st Annual Cohasset Road Race-by-the-Sea, 10K and Fran Coffey Memorial Fun Walk, sponsored by the Cohasset Rotary Club.

Cohasset Race Director Brad Goodwin and the Rotary were an integral part of One Book's success. Themes of the book were folded into the walk and run. Road race T-shirts complemented the One Book logo and quotes from the book were made poster size and placed along the route to inspire participants. Police Chief Hussey showed his spirit by running, as did McGillivray, who actually ran the loop 3 times in preparation for the race he'll direct and run on Patriot's day. Cohasset resident and Channel 5 anchor, Anthony Everett ran and also emceed the post race award ceremony, at which McGillivray told the crowd that he'd like to "come back as a Cohasset resident."

For eight weeks, free events like McGillivray's book signing and motivational talk filled the library with capacity crowds. In addition, Linda Fechter was an invited speaker at local book club meetings. Gayle Walsh, Reference Librarian, scheduled events to complement the themes of Be Your Best and Dream Big! The Cohasset Yoga Center; Life Coach, Joan Collins; and Lisa Hebert, licensed esthetician, were among those who donated their time.

The Chocolate Chip Cookie Challenge, a baking contest, was won by eight-year-old Maggie Ernst. Children's Librarian Sharon Moody coordinated efforts with schools and developed children's programming like the "slumber" party in which kids wore pajamas and brought sleeping bags to the library for an hour of quiet reading.

One Book was made possible by the Friends of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library, a non-profit organization formed to enrich the library by funding projects beyond the scope of the library's appropriated budget. Led by the Friend's President, Gail Flynn, the volunteer group sought a fresh, exciting program that would spark a love of reading and highlight the existing community outreach program. Library Director Jackie Rafferty suggested a town-wide reading program.

"It has been an incredible experience to have an entire town embrace the book."
— Dave McGillivray, "The Last Pick"

"With no budget and big ideas we had to be creative to make this happen," says Gail Flynn. "The Friend's funded the books, and the generosity of local business people like Ronnie Goodwin at Goodwin Graphics helped put the program on the Cohasset map."

Goodwin Graphics created and produced marketing materials, which included Euro stickers, water bottles, posters, pins and the One Book "02025" logo that adorned T-shirts. One Book partner, Buttonwood Books & Toys, gives a shirt to anyone who purchases "The Last Pick."

"It has been an incredible experience to have an entire town embrace the book," says McGillivray.

"The intent was to inspire others to set goals and reach for their dreams, yet this town is filled with countless people who have inspired me, from the youngest residents to the oldest."

Friends, Trustees and staff of the library; representatives of Cohasset's schools; parent/student organization representatives; clergy, town officials; the Council on Elder Affairs and local businesses including Buttonwood Books & Toys, Goodwin Graphics, the Cohasset Yoga Center, The Good Sport, the Cohasset Rotary Club and the Cohasset Mariner newspaper all worked together for this inaugural event. Pilgrim Co-operative Bank purchased "The Last Pick" for each of its employees. The Rotary Club purchased copies for Bishop Rocco House, a charity that they annually support.

"The Last Pick" intimately recounts the mental and physical obstacles that McGillivray faced along life's road and over the past few months has inspired many Cohasset residents to complete their own life's "marathon," whatever it may be.

One Book One Cohasset 2007 is only the first chapter in a wonderful story of how one library, in one town, set out to foster a love of reading and discussion of books among all of its residents.

Sports lover scores with a sweet retreat

By Nick French
NFRENCH@CNC.COM

The NCAA men's basketball Final Four is as exciting event as there is in American sports today.

It's right up there with the Super Bowl as an event to attend regardless of whether your favorite team is involved.

But it's also one of the toughest tickets in all of sports to get, and should you be lucky enough to procure one, the seats are often in another county from where the actual court is in the expansive domes that host the NCAA's premier event.

If you still want to see some exciting college basketball action, and make a weekend out of it, I offer up an alternative — the regionals.

The first two rounds feature six games over two days, and the opportunity to potentially see an amazing upset. But there are often more blowouts than buzzer beaters and quite a few overmatched teams from small conferences.

But the regionals, which includes two Sweet 16 games, and the Elite 8 game that determines one Final Four entrant often turns out the most exciting games of the tournament.

For three months I had attempted to secure seats for the East regionals in New Jersey, but ticket prices were almost as expensive as the Final Four.

The city of San Antonio is perfect for an event like this, and it will actually host the Final Four next April.

I had given up hope by March and resigned myself to a tournament at home, until a chance phone call with a friend stationed at Fort Hood in Texas the Sunday night after the opening weekend. With the South regionals in San Antonio, a three-hour ride from the base, an idea had sprung to life, and the two of us started working out last-minute logistics.

Because of the uncertainty of the tournament, it's difficult to follow your favorite team all the way through at each site, because you can't simply book a trip to a regional site, purchase tickets and expect your team to be there. As a result a last-minute trip can turn out to be a huge expense, but here are a couple tips for hoops fans who want to see the action up close.

See if it's possible to fly into a city nearby the host city. Flights into San Antonio for that weekend were no cheaper than $700, however I managed to fly into Austin at a much more manageable rate, and it was just a short hour-long drive to San Antonio.

Find out how big the venue is. In New Jersey the East regionals were held in a basketball arena that seats around 18,000. It was understandable that tickets had gone so fast. In San Antonio the Alamodome is a huge venue that still had plenty of good seats when I called the box office on Tuesday afternoon, and ultimately ended up with second-row balcony seats. If seats are sold out to the regional you want to go to find out whether scalping is legal in that particular state. There is always ebay as well, especially closer to the event as sellers try to unload tickets and make their original investment back.

PHOTOS/JASON HARRINGTON

The outside of the Alamodome, site of the 2007 NCAA South Regionals, just prior to game time. If you come to the city without tickets it won't be hard to find someone selling extra tickets, but be prepared to pay a little extra.

The writer was more than thankful for the exodus of Aggie fans which allowed him to move up for the second game of the night. Ohio State overcame a 20-point halftime deficit in this game to win in the final seconds.

Find out which hotel is hosting your school. It may be a little more expensive, but a weekend in a finer establishment surrounded by fans of your school is certainly worthwhile, and often leaves you within walking distance of all the points of interest, and the arena of the host city.

The games themselves were tremendous as the two semifinals Thursday night came down to the final shot, and eventual champion Ohio State had to come back from 20 down at the half. Walking into an arena and seeing thousands of fans clad in their school garb, one corner of the arena in red, one blue, and one orange. But the most jarring was seeing the entire upper deck and behind both baskets in maroon as thousands of Texas A&M fans came to cheer on their school making its first Sweet 16 appearance in 27 years.

The city of San Antonio is perfect for an event like this, and it will actually host the Final Four next April. Fans from all four schools marched around the city in their school's colors singing fight songs and high-fiving anyone they saw wearing their colors. It is truly a unique experience.

San Antonio is a perfect walking city with the Alamodome within distance of downtown, and the picturesque Riverwalk. On the Riverwalk you can stroll into any bar or restaurant and chat hoops with fans over a nice meal or a drink.

Austin is just a short drive away, and after the tournament was over Saturday, I went up to the capital city to check out the University of Texas.

The football stadium was under construction, so tours were not available but both the baseball and softball teams had home games. Being a child who grew up around softball, I chose to attend the Red River shootout on the softball diamond, as rival Oklahoma, then the No. 3 team in the country was in town to take on the seventh ranked Longhorns. College athletics, even a non-revenue sport like softball is so different from anything that takes place here it's hard to even describe. But it took two weeks for me to fully remove the tune to the "Eyes of Texas" out of my head. The enthusiasm students and alumni have for their Texas programs rivals anything we have here for our professional teams.

Overall it was an exciting sports-filled weekend, in a fun city that I would recommend to any sports lover out there.

Police/Fire Status Report

CFD responds to 147 incidents

During the month of February the Fire Department responded to 147 incidents. The summary of Fire Department responses during the month: six building fires; four hazardous materials responses; three illegal burning; nine motor vehicle crashes; 53 medical emergencies; 22 inspections; 15 investigations; two natural gas investigations, three lock outs/lock ins; 15 automatic fire alarm activations; three medical alarm activations; two mutual aid fire responses to other communities; one downed power line and eight miscellaneous responses. 46 emergency incidents were reported by 911 telephone: 30 medical emergencies; three building fires; five investigations; four motor vehicle crashes; one automatic fire alarm investigation and three assists.

"The ambulance transported 35 patients to South Shore Hospital," Fire Chief Robert Silva said in his monthly status report. "Eighteen of the 35 were advanced life support transports. Mutual aid ambulances transported nine patients to South Shore Hospital. Four of the nine mutual aid ambulance transports were advanced life support. There was one motor vehicle crash that required victims to be transported to the hospital."

"Automatic fire alarm activation responses totaled 15 for the month. Accidental activation of the alarm system accounted for six responses and alarm malfunction was the cause of nine responses," Silva said.

There were six responses classed as building fires for the month, three were for malfunctioning heating equipment; one was for a chimney fire; one was for malfunctioning electrical equipment and one was for improper disposal of smoking materials that caused a fire in a trash can inside a commercial building.

There were four responses to hazardous materials incidents during the month. One was for approximately 75 gallons of heating oil that leaked from a ruptured tank in the basement of a home. One was for approximately 50 gallons of gasoline that spilled due to improper fueling of a motor vehicle. One was for approximately 25 gallons of gasoline spilled by the company that fills the Town's vehicle fueling facility. The Massachusetts Department of Environmental Protection was notified for all of these incidents. The last response was for fluids that had leaked from a damaged motor vehicle. The Department handled this response with the assistance of the Cohasset DPW.

"The Emergency Medical/Ambulance Management hardware/software has been placed into service and the electronic transfer of billing information to Comstar began during February," Silva said.

All members of the Department received Incident Command training during the month. The 16-hour class was provided by the Massachusetts Firefighting Academy.

Police issued 101 motor vehicle citations

In Chief James Hussey's monthly status report, he said police made four arrests in February: one for Operating Under the Influence of Drugs; one for Minor in Possession of Liquor; one for Unlicensed Operation of a Motor Vehicle; and finally, one for Disorderly Conduct, Police Chief James Hussey said.

In February, the police department investigated 10 motor vehicle accidents, one of which resulted in personal injury. There were 101 motor vehicle citations issued totaling $1,785 in fines. Additionally, there were 34 parking tickets issued totaling $900 in fines, Hussey said.

Also in February the Emergency Dispatch Center received a total of 704 calls for police services, and of those 104 were Emergency 911 calls, Hussey said.

There were no reports of breaking and entering. Also in February there were 10 Criminal Complaints issued for the month, Hussey said.

Open burning season ends May 1

The season ends May 1. The Cohasset Fire Department is changing the procedure for obtaining a burning permit. Permits are not being issued over the phone as in past years. Anyone wishing to obtain a permit must apply at Fire Headquarters, 44 Elm St.

What are the limits on open burning in Massachusetts? —The Department of Environmental Protection (MassDEP) and the Cohasset Fire Department limit open burning for public health and safety reasons. Open burning pollutes the air and can make it difficult for people with respiratory problems to breathe. When the air is stagnant, open burning can pose smoke and odor nuisances — and health risks — to nearby residents, particularly in densely populated areas. Open burning can also pose a safety risk when it is not adequately controlled. The limits on open burning do not apply to outdoor cooking.

What can be burned, when, and under what conditions? — You may burn, with limits: brush, cane, driftwood, forestry debris, tree prunings, dead raspberry stalks, blueberry patches and infected beehives. You may not legally burn grass, hay, leaves, stumps or tires.

In most of the state's towns and cities, homeowners are allowed to burn brush, cane, driftwood and forestry debris - not including grass, hay, leaves or stumps - between Jan. 15 and May 1, so long as the open burning takes place:

- with the permission of the local fire department;
- between the hours of 10 a.m. and 4 p.m.;
- when the air is circulating well but winds are light;
- no less than 75 feet away from all dwellings; and
- on your own property and as close as possible to the source of material(s) to be burned.

What types of open burning are not allowed? — There are no circumstances under which it is legal to burn grass, hay, leaves, stumps or tires. They simply do not burn as "cleanly" as those materials that may legally be burned. All of them produce acrid smoke that causes nuisance conditions and threatens people's health. When tires are burned, they produce noxious gases and petroleum residue, both of which can be harmful to people and the environment.

Music Circus pitches opening day

Tickets go on sale Saturday for summer season

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

The South Shore Music Circus doesn't just open for the season, it throws a party for the season's first-in-line customers.

That's the idea behind the annual Music Circus opening day celebration, when Cohasset's tent-theatre, summer concert venue opens for its regular season ticket sales, adding an afternoon of live music, Boston radio street team promotion and general party atmosphere. This year's third annual event happens this Saturday, April 14, with the box office open at noon while the music and radio van broadcasting kicks off at 11 a.m. to entertain the earliest customers for tickets to this season's shows at both the Music Circus and its cousin venue, The Cape Cod Melody Tent, in Hyannis.

As in the past couple of years, opening day has an overall country music flavor. Radio station Country 102.5/WKLB (recently relocated to 102.5 from 99.5 on the FM dial) will once again be on site with their street team from about 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. The team will simulcast from a station vehicle and offer station promotional items to folks in line to purchase tickets.

Also from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m., and back for the third straight year, musical guests the Dave Foley Band will serve up their unique blend of country, rockabilly and blues. Singer/guitarist Foley, of Hull, is known as the South Shore Troubadour, and will be performing with the other two-thirds of his regular trio — Rich Holbrook, of Wareham, on bass, and Mal Shaw, of Pembroke, on drums.

"We get a lot of customers on our opening day, and they stand in line for tickets for a long time, so we like to keep them entertained," said Paula Gates, director of marketing and public relations for both the Music Circus and Melody Tent.

"Some people who come down bring beach and lawn chairs, and the whole event becomes a real party atmosphere," she said.

Gates added that the opening day festivities usually draw some 1,500 customers and patrons coming and going throughout the day, including many Cape Cod residents buying tickets for Melody Tent events as the box office there doesn't open until Memorial Day weekend.

Dave Foley

"It's always an honor to play at the opening."
Singer/guitarist Dave Foley

New for this year's opening, the Music Circus will be offering prizes every half hour through a random drawing. Patrons fill out an entry form and deposit it in the enter-to-win box. Some of the prizes include restaurant gift certificates, and gift certificates from the Hanover Mall and Independence Mall. The grand prize is a $100 gift certificate to Atlantica Restaurant on Cohasset Harbor.

Additionally, the Music Circus and Melody Tent venue sponsor, Eastern Bank, will have staffers on site offering promotional items.

The country theme of opening day is perhaps appropriate, as the Music Circus schedule has featured more country or country-based acts in recent years. Country artists coming to Cohasset this year include The Charlie Daniels Band (June 24), Trisha Yearwood (July 14), Gretchen Wilson (Aug. 23), LeAnn Rimes (Aug. 25) and, a new show just added, Trace Adkins.

A handful of exciting first-time Music Circus artists also highlight the summer schedule, including the Queen of Soul, Aretha Franklin (July 7), fast-rising jazz trumpet musician Chris Botti (Aug. 18), and alternative folk-rockers The Indigo Girls (Aug. 24).

Foley, who has played at the Music Circus in the past opening for such acts as the Doobie Brothers, Brian Setzer and Jodi Messina, is happy once again to be part of the venue's season.

"It's always an honor to play at the opening," said Foley. "The Music Circus could pretty much get anyone they want to do this, but they call me back each year. We (the Dave Foley Band) usually play a sort of low-key set for this date, and while the customers are waiting in line, they've got something to listen to."

Foley can also be heard performing solo each Sunday evening at the Next Page Café in Weymouth. The weekly dates are a feature of New Blue Productions, run by Bob "Satch" Romano, of Braintree.

Fresh from the Big Apple

Circus will take you back in time

For its 29th season, the Big Apple Circus — now at Boston's City Hall Plaza — is stepping back in time for "Step Right Up!," a visit to a classic boardwalk-style amusement resort by the sea which comes to life under the Big Top. Like any vintage boardwalk scene there are rollicking rides and awesome arcades, boisterous barkers and surprising sideshows, bathing beauties and beachcombers, and circus carousels of electrifying splendor! And like any classic circus, there are jugglers, acrobats, equestrians, aerialists, horses, dogs, and jesters. And since this is the Big Apple, Grandma the Clown is also on hand to transport audiences, through laughter, to a bygone world, where everyone wins and memories are golden.

As in past years, the Big Apple Circus boasts an international company which includes performers from Russia, England, England, Germany, China, Australia, France, Cuba, and, of course, the United States. Known as New York's original one-ring circus, the not-for-profit Big Apple Circus has long been dedicated to bringing the magic of the circus to diverse audiences through a range of outreach programs.

From the good old USA, Johnny Peers's capering canines, the Muttville Comix, create razzle-dazzle Midway mayhem!

Last week, for example, hundreds of children with sensory impairments gathered beneath the Big Apple Circus's Big Top tent at City Hall Plaza to experience the magic and joy of the circus at "Circus of the Senses." The free performance was attended by students from some 30 schools in Massachusetts and New Hampshire including Randolph's Learning Center for Deaf Children, and the New England Village in Pembroke.

This free performance was accomplished by providing headsets to children with vision impairments to hear a lively, running description of the action in the ring by Ringmaster Paul Binder and his Big Apple Circus co-creator Michael Christensen. Spotlighted American Sign Language interpreters narrate the show to the hearing-impaired. Following the performance, a group of sight-impaired children will be invited into the circus ring for a "touch session." They were able to feel the sawdust, touch the fabric of the elegant costumes and meet some of the performers — both the two-legged and the four-legged ones.

"Step Right Up!" *continues its run under the Big Top at City Hall Plaza through May 6. Tickets are available through Ticketmaster at (617) 931-2787, ticketmaster.com and at all Ticketmaster outlets. Tickets may also be purchased in person at BOSTIX (two locations, Faneuil Hall Marketplace and Copley Square) or at The Big Apple Circus box office in front of the Big Top in Government Center. By James Verniere
FILM CRITIC

Making an effort not to say "Perfect Stranger" is perfectly awful, I merely state that it is a typical April release, an unremarkable, programmatic effort with a title so generic it got more than 14 hits on imdb.com.

Academy Award-winner Halle Berry, who has not had much luck picking second-tier projects ("Catwoman" or "Gothika" anyone?), is the heroine of this seedy neo-film noir.

She is Rowena Price, an undercover reporter for the New York Post-like New York Courier. Ro and her slightly weird, obsessive techno-nerd partner Miles Haley (Giovanni Ribisi) have busted the upstanding, right-wing Senator Sacks, who heads a "Family First" campaign while hitting on interns.

When their expose, cleverly headlined as "Extramarital Sacks," is quashed by their superiors, Ro, who has flashbacks to a traumatic childhood event ("Marnie" alert), resigns.

The viewer might want to take this opportunity to cash out as well. Before you know it, Ro meets a slut-like girlfriend Grace (Nicki Aycox), who tells her of incriminating e-mails she received from a powerful, middle-aged advertising mogul, Harrison Hill (Bruce Willis), whom she met in a chat room. The mogul is married to a woman whose wealth underwrites his ambitions.

That chat room and those scandalous e-mail references are tip-offs that we will be gazing upon a lot of computer screens while sitting through this sordid, unsavory tale, something I can get enough of at work, thank you very much.

Before you can say, "Is this also an ad for Victoria's Secret?" Harrison Hill is toasting a pregnant Heidi Klum and putting the moves on underdressed undercover Ro.

Feel free to sort out the rest of this film's murky, uninteresting plot on your own. I was taking the time to mentally go through my to-do lists.

Directed by James Foley ("The Corruptor") and written by Todd Komarnicki and Jon Bokenkamp ("Taking Lives"), "Perfect Stranger" is an unflattering showcase for Berry, who founders when she is not well directed. Gary Dourdan of "CSI: Crime Scene Investiga-tion," normally a strong screen presence, is hardly in this film as Ro's on-again, off-again boyfriend. Ribisi's role is thankless. New York City does not leave much of a stamp as the setting.

In fact, "Perfect Stranger" is a film that leaves so little impression, I have already forgotten it.

Rated R "Perfect Stranger" contains nudity, violence and profanity.

Wet weather at root of sewer plant overflows

Stormwater, not wastewater, at fault

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

Last weekend's storm brought more than a lot of wind and rain — it caused serious issues for the Sewer Treatment Plant. The plant began overflowing early on Monday morning.

Sewer Commission Chairman Sean Cunning said the unusually high water flows caused by the storm resulted in an abnormal amount of water getting into the system. A combination of faulty infrastructure (cracked pipes, and infiltration and inflow issues primarily in the Central District) and the high flow of stormwater left the plant unable to handle the hydraulic flow. The plant typically treats about 300,000 gallons of wastewater each day.

When the plant can no longer handle the flow of water in the typical process through the plant, the overflow goes into an anoxic tank. That tank is designed to disinfect the overflow with chlorine tablets then the overflow spills right into the James Meadow. He stressed that this was a controlled overflow.

The chlorine has a gradual dissolve rate so, Cunning said, it should have little impact on the wildlife in the area but will leave the water significantly disinfected.

Wastewater spills over the anoxic tank at the Wastewater Treatment Plant on Elm St. on Monday around noon. The heavy rains of the storm caused an increased influx of stormwater into the sewer plant. The high volume of water left the plant unable to process all the water and led to the subsequent overflow. According to the Sewer Commission, the wastewater was partially treated with chlorine before spilling out into James Meadow.

24-year-old joins Multiple Sclerosis walk

By Nancy White

Noelle Leonard never thought that she would be diagnosed with multiple sclerosis (MS) at the age of 24, but that's just what happened last October.

"I always thought it was a older persons disease," she says. MS is thought to be an autoimmune disease that affects the central nervous system — the brain, spinal cord, and optic nerves.

On Saturday morning (April 28) she and a team of her friends and family will take to the sidewalks of Cohasset in support of finding a cure for multiple sclerosis. They will join more than 40 teams for the MS Lifelines Walk of Cohasset, a five-mile walk that begins at the South Shore Community Center across from the Town Common.

After her diagnosis in October, Leonard felt the need to find a way to

Stormwater Committee discusses future

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

The stormwater problem is not going away. This fact came in to focus this week with the heavy rains that caused flooding in several parts of town, a multitude of runoff issues and the Waste Water Treatment Plant to overflow.

The Stormwater Committee met on Tuesday night with a renewed energy to solve the town's abundant stormwater issues. Committee members will go in front of the Board of Selectmen on Monday to discuss their ideas and progress and to hear the selectmen's concerns.

The Stormwater Committee had been working for close to a year to establish a bylaw and committee to deal with the stormwater and flooding issues in town. They had anticipated getting a bylaw on the books at the Annual Town Meeting on March 31, but the Stormwater bylaw received a vote to indefinitely postpone.

"I believe we have done the hard work on the bylaw," said Chairman Marty Nee of the many months they have spent working on the bylaw, which was one of the major charges of the committee. Stormwater consultant Mark Bartlett agreed that the bylaw is 80 percent complete.

The bylaw will seek to establish an entity in town to deal solely with

An SUV has to navigate some flooding on Margin Street during the high tide Monday that created headaches in several areas along the Cohasset coast.

Nor'easter hits Cohasset

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

Lars and Rolf Gjesteby use a cell phone camera to try and capture the waves at Sandy Beach on Monday morning.

April showers to bring May flowers — that's what the old adage says, but this week's nor'easter was no rain "shower."

The powerful nor'easter hit the East Coast will gale force winds, widespread and damaging river and stream flooding, wave battery and tidal flooding, says Mariner weather observer Bob Skilling. Locally, there were many trees and branches down as east winds blew through town at speeds as high as 60mph.

Fire Chief Robert Silvia said that there was flooding in the typical pockets on Forest Avenue, Atlantic Avenue, Margin Street, Bow Street and Border Street. that were exacerbated by the extra high tides. The tides were as high as 12 feet, and with the storm surge and weather they got as high as 13 or 14 feet, he said.

"We had to close parts of area streets at the time of the high tide," Silvia said, which occurred in the early morning hours this week between 12 midnight and 2a.m., "It was combination of the tides and storm."

Rainfall totals for the three-day storm, April 15 through 17, were more than three inches.

The Border Street harbor seawall repair got hit hard in the storm. The temporary dam was not tall enough to hold back the high tide and storm surge waters and was breeched at each high tide. The dam was overtopped for the first time on Monday around noon according to the Silvia.

"We had to close parts of area streets at the time of the high tide."
— Fire Chief Robert Silvia

On Monday evening the tidal waters had washed away some earth protecting water and sewer mains. In coordination with the Water Commission, Chief Silvia said shut-off valves on either side of the exposed area were installed as a precaution. After each high tide a group of fire safety officials, the Greenbush Team and construction crew inspected and evaluated the damage.

"My main concern was to make sure emergency vehicles could pass," said Chief Silvia. Border Street along with other flood control areas were examined to ensure emergency vehicles could pass and any debris (rocks, sand, branches etc.) was removed from the road. The Fire Department had a back up plan in place to make sure these flooded areas would not delay a response to an emergency.

Kayak thefts under investigation

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

In a continuing rash of kayak thefts that span at four towns, police are investigating another Cohasset incident. At about 1:42 p.m., on Tuesday (April 10), a homeowner on Aaron River Road walked into the police station on Elm Street to report the theft of two kayaks. Chief James Hussey said one of the kayaks was valued at $500 and the other at $300. The kayaks were being stored at the rear of the house under the deck, Hussey said.

"We are working in conjunction with other towns that have seen similar kayak thefts," he said. This was the second kayak theft in a couple of weeks in Cohasset; the previous theft was on Bow Street.

Hussey said police ask that homeowners try to secure their kayaks in some fashion so they are covered and not visible. He explained that as part of the investigation police are going to shops that sell used kayaks and they are also looking on eBay.

Det. Sgt. Greg Lennon said the kayak thefts are an active case. He said Hingham, Norwell and Duxbury have also reported kayak thefts.

"We are hopeful working with other towns that we will be able to solve this case," Lennon said. "It is more helpful when we can work with other towns and compare notes.

Uninvited guests

About five youths tried to crash a gathering at another teen's house on Jerusalem Road on Sunday (April 15) and when they were turned away, they allegedly threw a couple of rocks and shattered two windows, police said.

Police are talking to witnesses and are following up on potential charges of property damage, Chief James Hussey said.

The uninvited guests initially took off and then came back again, Hussey said.

Wine stolen

Police say a thief or thieves stole $300 worth of wine from the garage to a home on Mohawk Way. The theft was reported at about 10:22 a.m. on Monday (April 9). Chief James Hussey said access was gained to the garage through a window. Fifteen bottles of wine were taken. Family members discovered the theft when they returned from a weekend away.

The incident is under investigation.

Lost wallet

Last week Sohier Street woman reported to police that she lost her wallet and that whoever found it had tried to use one of her credit cards for an internet purchase. Police urge residents to report missing or stolen credit cards to the credit card companies right away.

Joking around

Police spoke to the parents of some youths who reported that there was a fight involving about 12 teens at Cohasset Plaza on Tuesday night (April 10). Chief Hussey said it appears the kids, who called, were "just joking around" and the call was unfounded. The teens involved were all juveniles, meaning they are under 17. "We in fact identified the boys and got the parents involved," he said. "They spoke to the teens about the importance of not doing things like that (making a false call)." Apparently the boys had been at Papa Gino's earlier but there was no disturbance.

No license

A Brazilian man is being summonsed to court on the charge that he was driving without a license. An officer stopped the white Chevy pickup the man was driving in the vicinity of Border Street because the rear plate was hanging off. A computer check revealed the registered owner did not have a license.

In talking with the operator, who also was the owner of the pickup, police determined he had never had a Massachusetts license. The car was towed but police drove the man to work. Chief Hussey said the man should be able to get his paperwork squared away before his court date.

Mirror hit

Police said a large tow truck hit the side mirror of a car traveling in the opposite direction last Friday (April 13) at about 3:51 p.m. The operator of the truck apparently did not immediately realize the mishap occurred and continued along Beechwood Street. However, the matter was later resolved and the two parties exchanged papers, Chief Hussey said.

Woman fell

A caller reported that a woman fell after being hit by a vehicle in Cohasset Plaza outside Feng Shui at about 4:51 p.m. last Friday (April 13). As it turned out the woman had slipped and fell and was not knocked over. Chief Hussey said the woman was treated at the scene and she was fine.

Shotgun

A caller reported a man wearing a red jacket and hat was walking around outside with a shotgun on Summer Street at the harbor last Friday (April 13). As it turned out, after police talked to the parties involved and listened to their version of events, another man had given the man — that the caller had seen — the shotgun and he was walking across the street to put it in his truck.

However, the man who now had possession of the gun, had an expired FID (firearms identification card). He is being summonsed to court for carrying a firearm without a license and for improper storage of the firearm, which had not properly been secured in his truck, police said.

Crosswalk

One of a group of three kids riding bikes along Ripley Road coming down from the library came so close to people in the crosswalk that the man in the pedestrian group put his hand out and his hand made contact with the boy, who fell off his bicycle, Chief Hussey said.

A parent called police at about 10:50 a.m. on Saturday (April 14) saying an older man in his 40s had assaulted his son about 45 minutes earlier.

Chief Hussey said police gathered the parties together and they were able to speak amongst themselves and determine that this had been an accident.

contribute to the cause. She began looking for fundraisers on the MS New England website and was surprised to see a MS Walk right in the place she calls home, Cohasset.

"I felt like the only thing I could do after I was diagnosed was to give back," she says and she began putting together a team in the beginning of this year, "there is no cure right now and there are so many questions."

When Leonard was diagnosed, she says that she, surprisingly, felt relieved.

"It was a year long process of test after test," she says of the dozens of doctors visits, "then they finally knew what I had and I could start medication and try something to get better." Her optimistic attitude during the whole process never failed, she is always looking forward.

Leonard has named her team "Team Noellie," after a nickname given to her at her workplace, Road to Recovery in Hingham. She is expecting about 20 people to walk with her — family members from her native New Jersey, friends and co-workers will join her and her Chihuahua, Martini, on the five-mile trek. She hopes that through involving as many people in this effort will help to raise awareness for MS.

"This disease is so much about education, people don't know the details," she says, "the disease can be so different for each person."

Leonard deals with a set of daily symptoms but has learned over the last few months of the best ways for her to cope with them. There are four different types of MS, the most common is called Relapsing-Remitting, which is what Leonard was diagnosed with last year. This type has defined flare-ups or episodes of acute worsening of neurological function. They are followed by partial or complete recovery periods, or remissions.

"You wake up every morning and you don't know what the day is going to hold for you," says Leonard of the disease.

The MS Lifelines Walk is a series of walks throughout the country that raise money to end the devastating effects of multiple sclerosis (MS). There are 17 walks in New Hampshire and Massachusetts this spring and 700 across the United States. Last year 60 teams participated in the Cohasset MS Walk, event coordinators are expecting over 400 people to participate this year.

The Central New England chapter of MS Walk goal is to raise $2 million and have 14,000 walkers, one for each person with MS in Massachusetts and New Hampshire.

According to their website, www.msnewengland.org, 85 cents of every dollar raised in the MS Lifelines Walk will go toward achieving their mission. Roughly half is spent locally to help people with MS while the remainder funds leading MS research projects around the country. More that $10 million in National Multiple Sclerosis Society funds are spent in New Hampshire and Massachusetts medical research facilities.

Research has come a long way in the last few years "understanding of the disease is better, treatments for people with MS are better and hope for finding a cure is stronger than ever," says the MS New England website. Ten years ago there were no approved drugs for the treatment of MS, now there are six.

Approximately 400,000 Americans have MS, and that number is only growing, every week about 200 people are diagnosed. World-wide, MS affects about 2.5 million people. Because the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention does not require U.S. physicians to report new cases, and because symptoms can be completely invisible, the numbers can only be estimated.

The MS Walk of Cohasset has currently raised more than $20,000 for its cause — with still one week to go. The dedication of the participants in evident in the amount of money they raise and the hundreds of people involved. It's never too late to "join the movement," as their tagline says. Participants can register up to the day of the walk, Saturday, April 28. Teams are considered four or more people. Registration begins at 9a.m.

The walk will begin at 10a.m. at the South Shore Community Center on North Main St., across from the Common. The course travels through the village, down Elm Street to Sandy Beach (first checkpoint), continuing on Atlantic Avenue and Jerusalem Avenue, up Forest Avenue to (second checkpoint) Robin's Garage, back to North Main Street ending at the South Shore Community Center. The checkpoints will have water and snacks for the walkers.

The walk will conclude with a party at the Community Center for all participants with lunch, a DJ and a special guest clown.

For more information about multiple sclerosis, the MS Lifelines Walk or to donate to the cause, visit www.msnewengland.org or call 1-800-493-WALK (9255).

South Shore Art Center to offer scholarship for adults

The South Shore Art Center announces its annual scholarship for adults who are returning to their artwork following an extended interruption. The scholarship is named for artist Margaret Dillon, the first executive director of the Art Center.

The Margaret Dillon Memorial Fund was established to assist individuals who wish to return to the field of art after their artistic aspirations have been interrupted by other demands of life. Scholarship awards are based on potential, not experience, and are juried each spring. The first scholarship was awarded at the opening night of Margaret Dillon's retrospective art exhibition in June1989. This year's award will be presented at the 52nd South Shore Art Center Arts Festival to take place, Friday, June 15.

With funding for the arts reduced in so many ways, the Margaret Dillon Scholarship provides an excellent opportunity for an artist eager to return to creating art.

With funding for the arts reduced in so many ways, the Margaret Dillon Scholarship provides an excellent opportunity for an artist eager to return to creating art. Applicants may or may not have previously studied art, but need to have at some point explored visual art and have work to show. Scholarship funds may be used to defray tuition at the South Shore Art Center or any other school for the arts. Applications and art work must be submitted to the SSAC, 119 Ripley Road, Cohasset by Wednesday, April 25. Artwork should include 8 original works and 20 slides. For information and an application call 781-383-2787 or visit ssac.org.

Quigley wants to know your stormwater problems

By Karen Quigley
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

...Cohasset has a serious, recurrent and chronic stormwater crisis that threatens public health, the environment and the use and enjoyment of property.

In the justifiable shock and outrage over the WWTP overflow it's easy to overlook the cause – stormwater – and the fact that bacterial pollution from stormwater is equally harmful to our public health and safety.

However horrific, a WWTP overflow affects a limited and specific area; stormwater floods yards and basements in a majority of our neighborhoods and impairs and pollutes our water resources including Lily Pond, Straits Pond, Treats Pond, Little Harbor and the Big Harbor.

The data and information I have garnered as a member of the Harbor Health Committee and a former member of the Stormwater Committee leads me to the unshakable conclusion that Cohasset has a serious, recurrent and chronic stormwater crisis that threatens public health, the environment and the use and enjoyment of property. It must be dealt with now and in a comprehensive manner.

I intend to argue for just that, but I need your help. Only overwhelming input from residents will prove to Town Hall that we care, we want relief now, and we support an effective stormwater bylaw.

At the risk of sounding arrogant, I know I'm right, and although 'they' agree about the seriousness of the issue, 'they' won't listen to just me. I need your voices. If you, a friend, a neighbor, or a family member has been affected by stormwater flooding in Cohasset, please contact me.

Many voices raised together will be heard.

Karen Quigley, who lives at 27 Clay Spring Road, can be reached at: 718.383.6368, or via email at: kmquigley@comcast.net stormwater issues, creating accountability and allow for problems to be addressed. The shape that committee will take on in town is to be determined in the coming months.

"I think form should follow function," said Hull resident and citizen-at-large member Lawrie Reid, "let's define what we want to accomplish then figure out what we have to have to solve the problems."

Initially, the committee floated establishing a full-blown commission that would be a permitting authority. This "Stormwater Commission" would generate fees and draft regulations. This idea was met with reluctance last month and in previous meetings leading up to Town Meeting. The Board of Selectmen was hesitant to add another committee and an additional layer of bureaucracy to the town's bylaws.

"After receiving input from the Selectmen and public, we determined that we could function and be effective without being a full-blown commission," said Nee.

A structure that would establish the Stormwater Committee as an advisory committee to the other boards in town was floated. The "Stormwater Advisory Committee" would be able to feed up to other boards and focus on coming up with solutions to stormwater problems.

The committee floated the idea that if this form was taken, the stormwater permitting jurisdiction would fall under the Planning Board's auspices, who already issue building and other permits.

Member Sarah Charron, representative from the Conservation Commission, said there could be some value lost in structuring the committee in an advisory role.

"In a perfect world we would have one board" to deal with all stormwater issues from permitting to grant seeking she said. She felt that if the committee took on a more advisory role they would still be able to seek out grant money and create accountability for the problem.

"The town gains a sounding board for existing problems, right now there is no where to go with stormwater issues," said member Jim Kinch. "We can get a lot more done this way."

There was some discussion on which boards will need to be involved in the future committee.

"All town committees need to play a role in trying to solve the problem," Nee said, "we need to get to an arena where we can say we think this is the problem and we think this is the solution. Let's get the issues in front of the public, I'm a big believer in the public process."

The Stormwater Committee was designed to compose of one member of each of the following boards: Conservation Commission, Water Commission, Board of Health, Harbor Health Committee, Water Resources Protection Committee, Planning Board and two citizens-at-large. Member Jim Drysdale stressed that he would like to see a representative from the Sewer Commission on the board as well.

Committee members outlined goals for the next few months including fine-tuning the bylaw, holding public hearings and making sure they are ready to go in front to Fall Town Meeting. The committee, with the help of Bartlett, is applying for a Section 319 federal grant that, if awarded, would be used in conjunction with the Little Harbor sewer expansion and drainage improvement project.

Stormwater Committee representatives will meet with the Board of Selectmen on Monday, April 23; the meeting will begin at 7p.m.

Tennis tournament for Children's Hospital

Save the date for the annual Cohasset Tennis Tournament, a mixed-doubles tennis tradition that began in the 1950s and continues today to benefit Children's Hospital. This year's event kicks off on Friday, July 13, with the annual dinner auction at the Lightkeepers residence. The tennis tournament, which takes place on private courts throughout Cohasset, is set for the weekend of July 14 and 15.

This charity tennis tournament was originally started by Jesse Cox and her neighbors in the 1950s. It has since grown to include hundreds of players, from lifelong Cohasset residents to newcomers. The tournament also brings together a wide array of tennis abilities, from those who dust off their rackets once a year to those who are passionate about the sport. In the past eight years alone, about $100,000 has been raised for Children's Hospital.

For more information about the tournament or to be added to the email distribution list, contact Corey Axelson at gallella63@hotmail.com.

Band 'Gr8fl' to still be rockin'

Local group no longer only Dads

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

The Grateful Dads are still grateful to be able to play at local music hot spots, they're still grateful that they get to rock out to the likes of the Beatles and the Rolling Stones, they're still grateful that they can get a room up on its collective feet, but with recent changes, they are no longer all Dads.

The band that has become locally renowned for playing fundraisers, private parties and other local events has changed its name to Gr8fls.

"To this day the band dislikes the name, it's too cute, not edgy enough," Shea said of the former band title "Grateful Dads." The name was an obvious play off of the Grateful Dead and it seemed to fit since all members are fathers. But they didn't come to that conclusion easy either.

"The original name was The Fossils," Shea said, "but that sounded too old."

"Next they threw around the name "Second Wind," but that didn't quite fit. At the time there was a teenage band in Cohasset called "Fun in the Kitchen," so the band started brainstorming a name with "in the garage," because that was where they got there start. They ended up with "Dads in the Garage," but that didn't stick either. Shea said that they ultimately ended up The Grateful Dads.

Flash forward 15 years and dozens of gigs later, the band decided to change the name to Gr8fls — more out of necessity than an attempt at a rebirth.

Anne Czerkowski joined the band as a lead vocalist recently and the band felt that kicked it over the edge — it was time for something new.

The slight change in name to Gr8fls seems to open up new avenues and bring the band to a more current state of mind.

"It's a little Avril Lavigne, 'Sk8er Boi' reference," Shea says with a laugh, referring to the replacement of "ate" with the numeral "8" found not only in Lavigne's hit single but common in text and instant messaging.

The Gr8fls premiered their new name at the Cohasset Hockey Boosters fundraiser at the Red Lion Inn back in February. The band, along with its name, has evolved over the years branching out to new sounds and integrating new people.

Within the last year Vinny O'Brien, who sings and plays the harmonica, and Rich Oftsun, a Cohasset resident and singer, joined the Gr8fls along with Czerkowski,. The new sounds and configuration have created a shift in the band from a Beatles-type arrangement to more of a Rolling Stones flair, says Shea.

The slight change in name to Gr8fls (formerly the Grateful Dads) seems to open up new avenues and bring the band to a more current state of mind. Here the band is rockin' at the Cohasset Hockey Boosters fundraiser at the Red Lion Inn.

Anne Czerkowski joined the band as a lead vocalist recently and the band felt that kicked it over the edge.

The Gr8fls premiered their new name at the Cohasset Hockey Boosters fundraiser at the Red Lion Inn back in February.

The Gr8fls rely on rock and roll staples from the 60s and 70s, but Shea says they try to learn a few new current songs along the way. Rolling Stones, the Beatles, Steely Dan tunes are at the core of their set lists. However, with a new female voice, Shea says they're incorporating Sheryl Crow, KT Tunstall and Fleetwood Mac into their performances.

"Czerkowski is the only 'Idol' among us," Shea said, praising her vocal ability, "Most of us are encouraged by [current 'American Idol' contestant] Sanjaya because we're not great vocalists."

The band follows what Shea says is the "American Bandstand" rule when it comes to picking new music to play.

"It has to have a good beat and you can dance to it," he says that getting people off their seat and on the dance floor is their primary objective. Shea uses his commuting time, an hour each way to Cambridge, as his chance to check out new material.

The artists formerly known as the Grateful Dads played their first gig back in 1992 at a friend's 40th birthday party. Everything was set to go smoothly until then lead singer Peter Dupre attended a Bruins game two nights before the scheduled performance. A combination of the cold and the cheering did Dupre in and still, two nights later, he didn't have much of a voice.

"I had to mostly cover for [Dupre]," said Shea, "the band noticed but nobody else really noticed."

The band got its start in the early 90s. Shea moved to Cohasset in 1988 and within a year he met Victor Lanzillotti. They realized they both shared a love of music and guitar. Shea was a bass guitar musician after switching in college from lead guitar. Lanzillotti played lead guitar. The match was made and they started jamming together off and on in a garage.

They found a drummer from Scituate, Jonathan Leet. Both Lanzillotti and Leet were in software sales so, Shea says, they had a lot in common.

Then came Peter Dupre — a keyboard player and a strong vocalist — and the band was complete.

The band typically doesn't practice regularly, only when they know they have a gig lined up. A few of the members travel frequently for their jobs, so Shea says they were never able to nail down one day of the week that everyone could meet to rehearse.

The Gr8fls have two performances coming up in the next month. On Saturday, April 28 they will perform at St. Anthony's Parish Center to raise funds for the Appalachia Service Project. Then on Sunday, May 6 they will take the stage at the South Shore legendary live music locale, Sea Note, for a Wellspring fundraiser from 4p.m. to 7p.m.

"After we play at the Sea Note, the only place left to play [on the South Shore] is the Music Circus," says Shea.

And the dream lives on.

A big, old thank you

Volunteers appreciated in weeklong event at Senior Center

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

Next week the Cohasset Elder Affairs will join senior centers across the country in thanking their volunteer force. The last week in April has been dubbed National Volunteer Appreciation week and the Cohasset Elder Affairs has a week of special events slated to show appreciation to their dedicated volunteers.

"In this small town our volunteers exemplify the work that others are doing across the country," says Director of Elder Affairs, Linda Elworthy, "our nearly 140 volunteers prepare, serve meals and wash dishes, pots and pans by the hundreds; they drive vans, escort people shopping and carry in the bundles, they visit seniors who are homebound and go food shopping for others."

The volunteers of all ages and share their time and talents to the make the lives of Cohasset seniors better. In just the past year alone, the volunteers have given more than 5000 hours of their time to help the town organization complete its mission.

Elworthy said that if the town had to pay for the work done by volunteers, it would equal five full time positions.

"We could not function without volunteer force," she said, "the generosity of people in this community is incredible."

Volunteers are as old as four years old and as young as 80, who don't think they are senior citizens, Elworthy says.

The schedule is packed with events Monday through Thursday to celebrate and thank volunteers for the work they do all year long. Elworthy hopes that each volunteer will be able to attend at least one of the events during the week (see sidebar).

Brad Goodwin has been volunteering as a van driver for the past four or five years. He picks up seniors from their home and brings them to the weekly senior luncheons; occasionally he will bring seniors on shopping trips or around town.

"It's great fun, it's been very enjoyable. All the seniors are so appreciative," he says, "I get more out of it than the seniors do."

Goodwin made the decision a few years ago to make more time to do volunteer work, so he carved out the time in his schedule. He encourages his busy friends to do the same.

With funding short, the help from volunteers allows the Senior Center to put on more programs and provide better services to the seniors in the community, Goodwin said. With the help of the volunteers, Cohasset Elder Affairs is able to run luncheons every week and bring in speakers and programs on subjects relevant to Cohasset's senior population.

One of Goodwin's more memorable volunteer moments was when he picked up a senior citizen from her home and made a unique connection — she had graduated high school with his father.

"I think she is about 92 years old and she always remembers every time I pick her up," he said.

Patty Johnson was the founder of the Angel Food Project that prepares meals for seniors every Wednesday. She got involved when the Senior Center reached out to her mother when she moved in with Johnson's family about two years ago. She was so touched by their efforts that she wanted to get involved as well.

Martha Horsefield, who is volunteer coordinator for the Council on Elder Affairs, enjoys the recent CEA St. Patrick's Day lunch.

The Wednesday lunch has grown from a nine-person attendance to almost 40 regulars, Johnson said. Some of the ladies have made Wednesday dress up day — so the seniors get decked out in their finest to come dine at the Community Center.

"It's not about seniors having food to eat, it's about getting them out of the house and socializing," Johnson said, "a few minutes of time to listen to someone, or to give them a hug means so much to them."

She remembers a meal that was so good that all the seniors gave it (and her) a standing ovation when she walked into the room.

"We're supposed to take care of each other," Johnson says that the seniors are the ones that have made Cohasset a wonderful place to live, "I think it's very important to give to the community — and you get back so much more than you give."

The Cohasset Elder Affairs mission is to offer outstanding programs and services that provide for the physical, social and emotional needs of our older adults by assisting them to lead independent, stimulating and self-reliant lives as members of the community. Currently, Elder Affairs provides services to more than 1700 seniors.

"I just hope these great volunteers are around when I'm a senior citizen," Goodwin said with a laugh.

Volunteer opportunities are always available at Cohasset Elder Affairs. Call 781-383-9112 to find out more information on how to get involved.

OPINION

Water, water, everywhere

Officials say the reason behind the overflows at the Sewer Treatment Plant is stormwater, not too much wastewater.

Sewer Commission Chairman Sean Cunning explains that a combination of faulty infrastructure (cracked pipes, and infiltration and inflow issues primarily in the Central District) and the high flow of stormwater left the plant unable to handle the hydraulic flow.

However, regardless of the root cause, the problem needs to be fully addressed as quickly as possible.

Let's face it – "drainage" – is one of the critical issues of our time. With continuing new development, the opportunity for water to be absorbed into the ground rather than running over the surface into drains, down roadways, and ending up in our water bodies – is becoming more and more limited.

When the editor started covering Cohasset 15 years ago, she recalls the Conservation Commission asking the then Board of Selectmen about the Drainage Committee. There was such a committee on the books, but it hadn't met in ages. The commission explained that a committee that zeroed in on drainage issues was needed and could provide useful input. We are not sure the Conservation Commission's request to reestablish the drainage committee was ever addressed.

We hope the current Board of Selectmen will fully back the need to form a permanent Stormwater Committee that would be able to apply for grants and fully focus on this critical issue.

We realize that some may feel another town committee is unnecessary and only adds to government. However, all the other boards that could deal with this issue – the Harbor Health Committee, Planning Board and Zoning Board of Appeals – have full plates. A committee whose total focus is dealing with stormwater runoff and drainage could be of benefit.

The issue of handling stormwater, which can present a health risk, is now affecting the quality of life for many Cohasset residents. Ask yourselves if your basement is flooding on a regular basis? Have you noticed certain roadways and areas of town are flooding more often? Are the puddles on your lawn taking longer to be absorbed?

The Sewer Commission is planning to meet with abutters to the treatment plant at 4 p.m. on Monday. The Sewer Commission is also conducting a public hearing Monday on its sewer rate hikes. Once that hearing is complete and if time permits, we hope the commission will join the ad hoc Stormwater Committee at Monday's Selectmen's meeting to talk about this past week's rain event.

Cohasset's spectacular beauty is a double-edged sword. Its ledge and rocky coastline do not lend themselves to good drainage.

The town really needs to get its arms around this problem and quickly. Those who live along Elm Street are being subjected to the worst of it. They have a right to be very upset and concerned.

We applaud Karen Quigley of Clay Spring Road for seeking feedback from residents about their stormwater issues. Please contact her with your story at: Karen Quigley, 27 Clay Spring Road, telephone:

781.383.6368 or via email: kmquigley@comcast.net

Ms. Quigley says, "The data and information I have garnered as a member of the Harbor Health Committee and a former member of the Stormwater Committee leads me to the unshakable conclusion that Cohasset has a serious, recurrent and chronic stormwater crisis that threatens public health, the environment and the use and enjoyment of property. It must be dealt with now and in a comprehensive manner."

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Agrees with Alfred Slanetz

TO THE EDITOR:

Mr. Alfred Slanetz's op-ed article (April 13 Mariner) was a breath of fresh air, badly needed. I agree wholeheartedly with every word.

Leonora Jenkins, instead of "causing long term damage to our schools" (Town wide message, April 13 Mariner) should be thanked for her thoughtful comments which, if adopted, would benefit the schools and the beleaguered taxpayers.

Divisive messages like that sent by Ms. McMorris and Mr. Spofford have no place in Cohasset.

Heartfelt thanks to Rev. Ritts

TO THE EDITOR:

On behalf of the entire Rose family, I would like to express our deepest gratitude to Gary Ritts for his gracious support during our time of great loss. My Uncle Chuckie died suddenly on April 4th. We were extremely shocked and saddened and found it quite difficult to come to terms with his death and our grief.

Through Gary's support and kind words, we were able to have more peace of mind. Hearing his strong, consoling voice brought us great comfort and strength. The Memorial Service which Gary conducted was beautiful. As we left the Church we felt the sense of peace we had longed for, knowing Chuckie was in a better place and not far from us. We are so lucky to have someone as loving, compassionate and caring as Gary Ritts in our community.

Children's School Funding Rally

TO THE EDITOR:

Please join me on Wednesday, April 25, on Boston Common, near the Park Street T stop, from 12:30 to 1:30 p.m., rain or shine, at the Stand for Children's School Funding Rally. Stand together to demand that state lawmakers make our school children a top priority in 2007! We are asking leaders on Beacon Hill to commit to delivering immediate financial relief to all school districts and to initiate funding reforms to ensure that all children have the opportunity to succeed.

Stand for Children is chartering buses to pick up rally attendees in communities around the state. Contact Stand for Children at www.stand.org/ma or call 617-547-3800 to reserve a seat on a bus to the State House.

Wow, thank you for publishing such great photos of the 31st Cohasset Road Race by the Sea. Laura Sinclair did a wonderful job of capturing the beauty of the course, and the many different participants of the events held that day. Thank you, Laura.

And the Letter to the Editor from Heather in Virginia, really hit on the essence of this year's "One Book One Cohasset" selection on the "The Last Pick" to help "inspire others to set goals and reach for their dreams". Thank you Heather for sharing your story with everyone, and we hope you know that we are all proud of your accomplishment and we hope you will return to run in Cohasset again soon. Thank you for helping to inspire us all.

Slanetz's election view 'all wrong'

COMMENTARY

PAT WATERS

...your characterization of the write-in campaign as "negative" and dealing in "character assassination" is also wrong-headed.

Editor's note: Pat Waters provided the Mariner with a copy for publication of his response to Alfred Slanetz's commentary that ran last week.

Dear Al,

I have just finished reading your commentary in the Cohasset Mariner and feel compelled to advise you that you could not be more wrong.

First, there was no "corruption" of the democratic process. A write-in campaign on behalf of any eligible person is fair, legal and ethical. While you may personally prefer a more orderly and genteel process you have no basis to make such a charge. Rousing action from complacency should be praised, not attacked.

Second, your characterization of the write-in campaign as "negative" and dealing in "character assassination" is also wrong-headed. It was quite clear to me that I was suddenly presented with four choices for two school committee seats. It was also clear to me that two candidates had consistently positioned themselves, by act and deed, to support increased funding for the schools; one candidate had consistently opposed more funding for the schools; and one candidate was new to the issue, but had written articles and campaigned (perhaps on the belief that the race was uncontested) that the schools could better allocate the resources they had. This put the candidates into two very distinct groups: (1) those that support increased funding and (2) those that do not. A distinction that is very relevant and fair to point out.

Third, the phone and e-mail messages were not "vicious". The use by any campaign of the term "pro-school" or "anti-school" is so vague and amorphous that it carries no meaning. It certainly isn't vicious. As a case in point, on the eve of the election, the Cohasset

Week of tides, train and trees

MAKING TRACKS

TOM GRUBER & MARK BRENNAN

Last week half of the Greenbush Team took a small vacation trip to warmer climes, the net result — the other half of the team was up to his eyeballs in stuff going on here in Cohasset. Thus, there was no article last week. Now we are back up to speed and we'll bring you up-to-date with what's happening.

Forest Avenue – By the time you read this, tree clearing should have started late this week on Forest Avenue. Work was delayed as a result of emergency tree work that the contractor had to complete before he could start on our project. Now, the trees are comin' down.

The Border Street Harbor Wall Repair — Just as in the Forest Avenue project, the nor'easter this week created a bag full of problems for the harbor wall project, as well. The ultra high tides coupled with a storm surge caused the Portadam to be overtopped for several tide cycles. The only thing the contractor could do was to stabilize the area and minimize the water damage to the exposed roadway. The contractor, T Ford, was extremely cooperative and provided personnel on site during all high tides so that corrective action could be taken whenever necessary. We really appreciate the contractor's cooperation and diligence.

The accompanying photo shows the sea wall area just after the Portadam had been overtopped during one of the high tides. This construction area is exposed directly to the ocean through the harbor entrance, but fortunately there was little wave action, which could have been disastrous.

Numerous meetings were held after high tide events with safety forces as well as the Town's utility operations. There was some evidence of Border Street being undermined and we carefully examined the roadway to assure that it was safe after each tide cycle. Another concern also arose on this past Monday evening. The tides that overflowed the Portadam also exposed a small section of the water main that serves Government Island and the properties on the Scituate side of the Border Street Bridge. The sea wall contractor backfilled the area around the pipe to cover and stabilize it from any further exposure. After careful deliberation, the Cohasset Water Department decided to take some emergency preventative measures in the event that there is damage to the water main. They installed shut-off valves on either side of the work area on Border Street so that, on the chance that a catastrophic leak occurs, the area can be isolated. Further, they are running temporary pipe from one side of the work area so that water service can be maintained even if the main is shut off.

Greenbush Stuff – As we mentioned in our last article, CBB is hard at work in several areas. The photo, taken looking from Lantern Lane down the Pond Street Hill shows the new section of Pond Street curving to the right toward the tracks. The remains of the large rock are just to the left of center. If you look carefully, you will be able to see the area in the center of the roadway near the railroad tracks where the traffic separating islands will be placed. Spring Street can barely be seen as it comes in from the left side of the photo. Also, this photo shows the newly laid asphalt base coat.

While work is going on at Pond Street, Sohier Street is also under construction where it is being widened. Moving further South, to Beechwood Street, CBB is working on a drainage problem in this area. A large section of the asphalt has been removed on the Main Street side of the tracks. This portion of the street paving needs to be redone to correct drainage problems that have existed since the paving was originally installed. Let's hope this time the fix helps the local drainage.

A chief critiques a talk show

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

You wanted to see me, chief?

Yes, Harold. Sit down. I wanted to talk to you about your talk show. We've been monitoring it for some time now and, frankly, the choice of words by you and some of your guests is beginning to cause us some concern.

I'll admit I've pushed the envelope on occasion, but I've tried to stay within the bounds of good taste. What words are those that bother you?

Our monitor reports that you had a guest that not only used the word "ho," but used it three times on one broadcast. What do you say to that?

I don't recall it. When did it happen?

It says right here, last Dec. 24.

Oh, that! That was the interview with Santa Claus. He's been saying "Ho, ho, ho" ever since his workshop was discovered at the North Pole.

For crying out loud, keep your voice down. They may have the office bugged.

Who?

The FCC, or the NAACP, or the ACLU, or the CIA, for all I know. Just don't let it happen again. Next time have him say "tee hee" or something that won't get us in trouble. We just were lucky this time that Al Sharpton wasn't listening.

Have Santa say "tee hee," right. Anything else?

Yes. Our monitor says you spent a whole hour once discussing that Valerie Plame thing and several times the word "Niger" came up.

Sure, it's the country in Africa that her husband visited in search of uranium yellow cake. It would have been hard to ignore it. Anyway, it's pronounced "neye-jah."

I know it is, but somebody might mispronounce it on one of our programs, and under the worst possible scenario Jesse Jackson may be tuned in. We just can't take that chance.

But what shall we call it if it comes back into the news?

Call it anything you want. Nobody pays attention to those African countries, anyway.

Careful.

What?

The bug. Jesse Jackson may have planted it.

Oh, God, do you think so?

No, but is there anything else?

Yes. There is. I see by your schedule here that you have a woman coming on to discuss the effect of nursery rhymes and stories on preschool children.

I do.

I suppose the stories include "The Three Little Pigs?"

They do.

They have to go. Statistics show that 1.7 percent of our listening audience is Muslim. Muslims don't eat pork. Do I have to draw you a picture?

Jews don't eat pork, either, and I've never heard that the Three Little Pigs ever bothered them.

Careful.

What?

The bug. It may be B'nai B'rith.

Oh, no, do you think so?

Who's tougher: men or women?

DRIVING WHILE TYPING

JOHN LENGYEL

I noticed an impressive bruise on my wife's arm the other day.

"Wow," I said. "How'd you get that?"

She looked at it, puzzled.

"I don't know."

"When did it happen?"

"No idea."

This sort of thing drives men crazy. "How can you not know how you got a welt like that?! You didn't steal a PlayStation 3 recently did you?"

"I just don't complain about little bumps. Some of us are hardier than others," she said, knowing full well I would now be forced to defend my honor by slandering her in the newspaper.

I'm normally not one to generalize. People who generalize are lazy thinkers whose ideas should be used for entertainment purposes only and do not reflect the views of the Mariner or her parent company, AOL/Time Warner DaimlerChrysler Frito-Lay. That said, I think all spammers should be summarily executed. I also think women bruise more easily than men. At least the women in my life seem to. I can bang my shin against the open dishwasher door as I did just this morning, hard enough to cause a hairline fracture and 10 full minutes of profanity, and I won't have a single mark to show for it. I get zero credit. Meanwhile all it takes is a hard stare to turn my sister black and blue, and my daughter Mary is a certified wimp with marks on her thighs that suggest she's jousting in her free time.

This bruisability discrepancy leads to a lot of arguments over whether men or women are physically tougher. The argument always ends the same way, too. Guys can talk all day about things they voluntarily endure — war, rugby, clothes shopping, you name it — but inevitably the subject of childbirth is brought up, the women in the room cross their arms and smile triumphantly, and the men have to think of a totally different conversation they can dominate.

This seemed like a fair contest to us, the mostly drunken crowd egging them on. The two of them were about the same weight and height.

I want to be clear that I have every sympathy for women over the whole childbirth thing. I'm easily the biggest fan of epidurals that I know. It should be illegal to perform a bikini waxing without first offering an epidural. I would change my name to Mister Epidural if I didn't think it would give my wife another excuse to claim we're unrelated. But there ought to be some way to resolve the "who's tougher" question without resorting to apple-and-orange comparisons.

A college dorm mate of mine thought he had the solution. He bet his girlfriend that if they ran at each other and crashed head-on, repeatedly, that she would complain before he did. This seemed like a fair contest to us, the mostly drunken crowd egging them on. The two of them were about the same weight and height. Neither one played any contact sports. So with great fanfare they separated by 15 yards, faced each other, and we all yelled, "Go!" They ran toward one another at a speed that surprised even the sober among us and at just the last instant she raised her left knee — she later claimed it was an involuntary reflex — and nailed him right in the groin. They bounced off one another, she spun around and stayed on her feet, and he crawled very slowly to the emergency room while we tried to raise her on our shoulders but mostly fell over and went to sleep in the courtyard.

This argument may have higher stakes for me than it does for most men. I'm married to a second-generation immigrant of farming stock who doesn't believe in injury timeouts, naps, or relaxation of any kind for that matter. Both she and her mother have one goal in life and that is to keep moving. If you have nothing pressing to do at the moment you should go milk a cow. If you have no cow handy I'm quite sure there's something you can shovel — just keep busy. Entertainment, breaks, terminal illnesses — these are indulgences to be scorned. They're really a lot of fun, these two. Unfortunately I have the biorhythms of a large cat. I like to sleep in, work intensely hard for about 30 minutes, then snooze till dinner and spend the night hunting for funny clips on YouTube. It's all very primal, and obviously it clashes with my wife's agrarian nature, but so far we've managed to work things out by yelling a lot.

I'm sure the relative pain threshold issue will never be resolved between my wife and me, let alone between the sexes. But I will say that if tomorrow the responsibility for giving birth were somehow shifted from women to men it's not true that we'd be doomed as a species. We would, however, be real sticklers for due dates.

John Lengyel lives in Cohasset, unaware that his wife has recently begun leaving her keys in his car and parking it just a little bit closer to the street every night.

School race leaves unanswered questions

COMMENTARY

PAUL SCHUBERT

The recent Cohasset School Committee race certainly enjoys a place in town lore. Two candidates appeared out of the mist hours before the race, with one able to defeat an announced candidate. It was quite a contest. Also interesting is the manner in which the editorial views of the Mariner have colored the landscape of the town viewpoints. In the editorials of the past week, both on line and in hard copy, the Mariner editorial desk has not given a particularly even-handed approach to the opinion extant in the town. Parthian blows are not helpful when volatile opinions are expressed.

I believe proponents employ their abilities and opinions to buttress the cause they support. I believe that invective criticism does not constitute support. Constructive criticism is always welcome, but not at the expense of undermining support that the Cohasset School system and administration deserves. If the editorial position of the Mariner is to instigate and inflame the situation then that certainly will help circulation. I look at the editorial view as one that allows for civil discourse regarding topics. This is a wonderful opportunity for the Mariner to investigate the causes of why a school committee race would be so important as to generate underground candidates and create strong emotions regarding the outcome of the race.

Perhaps a disproportionate rise in income has led to a waning in the sense of collective responsibility for education. Has the Mariner editorial board considered such a discussion?

Cohasset has fine schools, a superbly educated population, and enjoys one of the highest per capita incomes in the area. Why then, is such energy expended on the schools and a local school committee race? It is because it is vitally important to the students who pass through the schools, to the homeowners who have a stake in how real estate values appreciate, and to those who feel public education is a social responsibility. Regardless of whether your children are out of the school system due to age, personal preference for private or religious education, or perhaps no children at all, the support is necessary. Should you own a house in town, the current market decline will be insulated if the school system is superior to others in the area. Since proposition 2-1/2 passed, the tax on homes and the vehicle excise tax is limited. The revenue for any given town in the Commonwealth is strategically dependent upon state aid and the homeowner.

The Mariner has a wonderful opportunity to look into the root causes and history of this race. How has the town approached the funding of all services (including but not solely focused on the schools) after 25 years into the Proposition 2-1/2 vote? Have the demographics in town changed so dramatically as to have a larger number of students seeking private education? Perhaps a disproportionate rise in income has led to a waning in the sense of collective responsibility for education. Has the Mariner editorial board considered such a discussion? What would it take to entice those children in private school to return to public school? It could be quite constructive to consider a journalistic piece that envisions a cooperative approach to problems, as opposed to an editorial written by one with no stake in the outcome, aside from the sale of papers. Please, as a measure of civility, try this. It could be productive.

"This incident reinforces the need to do something about stormwater in town," said Cunning in a phone interview, indicating that stormwater as far back as Forest Avenue is draining to James Meadow. "There's a lot of run off and contamination," he said, adding it's not all due to the Sewer Treatment Plant.

Karen Quigley, Chairman of the Harbor Health Committee, agrees that stormwater issue is primary to fixing the problem with the Sewer Treatment Plant.

"Stormwater is a very serious problem that needs attention now," Quigley said in a phone interview. She stressed that stormwater pollution is a regular occurrence with every rainstorm.

"There is no discounting the bacterial pollution from wastewater overflows, but these occur maybe once or twice a year. The bacteria is coming through the stormwater in all rain events," she said, "people should be just as concerned with the health risk posed by stormwater pollution."

Cunning said the biggest complaint he received during the storm was the lack of early notification, a complaint that surfaced last year following the Mother's Day storm.

"This incident reinforces the need to do something about stormwater in town."

— Sean Cunning, Sewer Commission

Police Chief James Hussey sent out a town-wide Connect-CTY message around 2p.m. on Monday. The message, initially intended to be sent just to abutters, warned residents to keep their children, pets and themselves away from water contact with the James Brook and meadow area for the following five days. That period of time, two or three high tides, allows the meadow to flush itself out to the harbor, Cunning explained.

Cunning said the delay was due to the Patriots Day holiday and town offices were closed. The Commission plans to work with the Town to prevent a delay from happening again in the event of the holiday or weekend.

A second message was issued due to the volume of calls the police and fire stations were receiving from confused residents asking whether the drinking water was safe. The message assured residents town-wide that the drinking water was indeed safe.

At least one resident reported to the Mariner that she was confused by the initial message that while indicating to stay away from the flood control area around Elm Street and James River did not specify that the drinking water was safe. The fact that message was sent beyond the immediate area of James' Meadow likely lead to the additional confusion.

Cunning said that in the future the Sewer Treatment plant would do a better job of notifying the abutters when there is an overflow. The Standard Operating Procedure for an overflow involves, among other things, taking samples from the overflow every hour and notifying the abutters. Cunning said there has been a substitute plant operator for the last few weeks who was not aware of all the protocol with an overflow event and "was just trying to control the spill."

Kathy Crosby of 75 Elm St. is a downstream abutter to the Sewer Treatment Plant. With every storm over the last few years, Crosby has experienced increasingly worse conditions following large rain events. Her home, which has historically never had a wet basement, now floods with inches of rainwater.

On the side of the plant the wastewater falls into the Meadow. Neighbors are concerned that the sewage has ended up untreated in their flooded backyards. High levels of bacteria, enterocci and fecal coliform, are expected following a storm, officials say. Residents town-wide were warned via a Connect-CTY call to avoid contact with the water in the James Brook, Elm St. flood zone for five days beginning Monday.

Last year in the infamous Mother's Day storm the Waste Water Treatment Plant had a similar overflow, Crosby wasn't aware of the sewage overflow. An avid gardener, Crosby continued her regular routines.

"I was horrified, I can't believe I was out there picking weeds in that," said Crosby in a phone interview. She developed a rash that she thought was allergies and ended up with a massive infection in her eye. She now believes the rash was due to the presence of sewage and other pollutants in her backyard.

Besides the sewage that has ended up in her backyard, she has suffered serious flooding on her property—especially in the last two years. The flooding has caused a house that was built in 1860 to have new settlement issues — the foundation is shifting and walls have began separating from the ceiling. She believes that these problems are due to the new Greenbush construction in the wetlands and the replacement of a 57-inch pipe with a larger culvert.

The combination of an influx of stormwater and the plant overflow contribute to her ongoing problems, she said.

"Stormwater and sewer for those of us downstream from Waste Water Treatment Plant are one in the same," said Crosby, "one exacerbates the other."

Crosby went to check out the Treatment Plant around 11a.m. last Monday to see if there was an overflow due to the rainstorm.

"It was like Niagara Falls, the water was coming over the tops of the tanks," said Crosby, who took pictures and then samples of what was flowing out of the tanks. One was taken directly from the overflow coming out of the tank and the other from a standing puddle as it was draining into the meadow. She also took samples from her basement and her backyard to see what the levels of fecal coliform and enterococci were.

Jim Drysdale of Cedar Acres Lane, a retired medical school professor and medical researcher, performed the tests using procedures used by the state. He says the sample taken from the effluent at the sewer treatment plant had the "highest figure of fecal coliform he has ever recorded." The results were about 540,000 cfu/100mL; cfu stands for colony forming units. The state swimming standard for fecal coliform is 200 cfu/100mL.

Preliminary tests for enterococcus came out to be greater than 100,000 cfu/100mL, high above the state swimming limit of 104 cfu/100mL.

The sample taken from the surrounding water in Jacobs' Meadow, in Crosby's flooded backyard, exceeded 10,000 cfu/100mL for fecal coliform and 13,000 cfu/100mL for enterococci. These measurements are only indicators of the presences of bacterium, they are not necessarily pathogens or harmful. However, with the greater concentration of the bacteria, there is an increased likelihood that some are pathogens, Drysdale said.

"These analyses show a potentially serious health hazard for our community," said Drysdale. At press time the lab results from the Sewer Commission samples have not been received according to Cunning.

Brown sewage floats in a shallow puddle inside the Wastewater Treatment Plant shortly before noontime on Monday. Sewer Commissioner Sean Cunning said the plant upgrades scheduled to be done in conjunction with the Little Harbor sewer expansion project will result in a more controlled release from the plant in the event of a large rain event like the one this week. The large amount of stormwater was a main factor in the sewer plant overflow.

Health department not surprised by high counts

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

The high levels of bacteria does not surprise the Board of Health which regularly takes water quality measurements all other town. Both Health Agent Dr. Joseph Godzik and Board of Health member Steve Bobo agreed that the five-day waiting period to steer clear of the flood area near the Sewer Treatment Plant is a fair warning to residents.

"Five days is probably a conservative amount of time," said Godzik, who indicated that when there are high counts of bacteria at beaches there is typically a 48-hour waiting period.

"We certainly don't want to have these high numbers coming from the area around the Sewer Plant, but until the town puts in mitigation measures, we're going to see these high numbers when there is a storm," said Godzik.

"...until the town puts in mitigation measures, we're going to see these high numbers when there is a storm."

— Dr., Joseph Godzik, Health Agent

Godzik also said that it is impossible to determine how much pollution sewer contributed and how much was due to stormwater. The stormwater can be contaminated by any number of pollutants, including animal feces and fertilizer, on its way to James Brook.

"Certainly any [sewer] overflow is going to contribute to the overall pollution of the stream and harbor," he said. Godzik also said that the tests performs by resident Jim Drysdale, or any lab results, only test for indicators of the bacterium, not pathogens, "indicators don't necessarily cause disease."

Bobo, who is involved with taking water quality measurement on a weekly basis, knows that the rain causes an increased amount of bacteria in stormdrains throughout the town, but he said that once the stormdrains flush out, the readings are lower.

The survival of bacteria in temperatures below 40 degrees Fahrenheit is remote, Bobo said.

"The bacteria dies off outside fairly readily," he said, "most of the bacteria will dissipate after a night of cold weather, below 40 degrees."

Bobo stressed that proper hand washing is the first line of defense against any virus or bacteria.

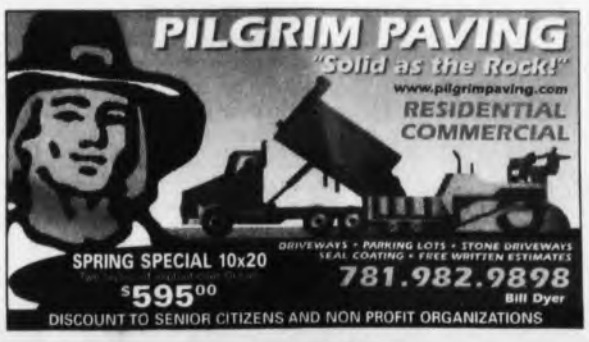
Can sewer plant upgrade cope with more tie-ins?

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

The Sewer Commission recently got a $2 million increase in its Little Harbor district sewer expansion project at Town Meeting. The total allotment for the project is more than $15 million. The commission is scheduled to begin the project by the end of June, but have yet to receive a final permit from the state.

Concerns have been raised following this recent storm that ask whether the Waste Water Treatment Plant will be able to handle the additional 150,000 gallons of wastewater each day.

Sewer Commission Chairman Sean Cunning said that the solution to this problem is the plant upgrades that are tied into the Little Harbor project. With the upgrade, Cunning says there will be a controlled release from the plant and UV lights will disinfect the effluent, in addition to chlorine.



"We can't handle the flow now, but with the upgrade the margin is going to be dramatically increased," Cunning said. About $1 million will be invested in the plant over the next few years. Additional membranes will be added to increase the capacity of the plant.

But Kathy Crosby of 75 Elm St., who is a downstream abutter to the Sewer Treatment Plant, is unsure that the upgrade and the expansion is the answer to her problems. While she understands the need for Little Harbor homes to be connected to the town sewer system, she doesn't want to bear the consequences.

"Given what I know happens during each rain event, it seems only reasonable to ban any further connections to the Waste Water Treatment Plant until the flooding and overflow problems have been corrected and mitigated, then consider what to do next," Crosby said.

"If they [sewer expansion homes] are going to flush their toilets and it's going to end up in my backyard, then I don't agree with it," she said, "while their property value will skyrocket once they are on sewer, my property value is at just about zero right now."

On Monday, April 23 at 4p.m. the Sewer Commission will hold a meeting at the Town Hall to walk through what happens in the event of an overflow and discuss overflow concerns with the abutters and any other interested citizens. Later that evening, the Sewer Commission will hold a public hearing on a proposed rate increase at 7p.m. at the Town Hall auditorium.

HEALTH NOTES

Storm boosts need for spring-cleaning

Tick season is also upon us

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Hopefully, the worst is over, and we'll soon have weather we'd like to go outside in. So far, this spring, there hasn't been much. But, since Earth Day is next Sunday, (see my column in the April 22 Mariner) we'll be out collecting trash for the Town's biggest and perhaps most needed cleanup. Good timing! After the recent storm, we'll need the Earth Day Cleanup more than ever. It's already begun in the Jerusalem Road, Bow Street and other sites. The DPW has been busy in some of the worst places.

Learn about the ways you can help put the Town back together after the storm. — Come to the Town Hall parking lot on Sunday April 29th at 12:30 p.m. for assignments to coordinate and establish trash pickup sites and give ground rules. Cleanup duration should be until about 4 p.m.. The Board of Health will provide a limited number of attractive free T-shirts to commemorate Earth Day on a first come first served basis.

But be careful! — While you're out rooting about, look out for ticks. Before the big storm news, this article was to be about the critters. The season of greatest tick infestation is mid April through August, the time when deer tick nymphs attach themselves to hosts: dogs, cats and us.

Come to the Town Hall parking lot on Sunday April 29th at 12:30 p.m. for assignments to coordinate and establish trash pickup sites and give ground rules.

The two principal ticks found in Cohasset are the deer tick (Lyme disease carrier), and the American dog tick. The dog tick has not been associated with Lyme disease, but is a vector for tularemia and Rocky Mountain spotted fever.

The typical deer tick habitat is just where we'll be looking for cans and debris. Deer ticks are smaller than dog ticks, and in nymph stage feed on small mammals like a field mouse from which they can transfer to humans passing by. So, if you're going out to collect trash if you're in the woods, or in high grass, better take the precaution of covering up completely.

Many of the best places to find trash are also good places to find ticks: Government Island, Black Rock Beach, the dune side of Sandy Beach, the ball fields along North Main Street, Ellms Meadow near Cushing Road and James Lane. Tuck your trousers into your socks, and perhaps get out the deet insect repellent and give your legs a spray. Remember, light colored clothing shows off ticks, which may be along for the ride. When you come home, put your clothing in a hot drier for a few minutes. Ticks must have been living aboard for at least 24 hours to infect humans, so it's highly probable that a careful inspection will reveal them before they've done harm. They will not infest pets with suitable protective collars.

If you find a tick, don't use gasoline, nail polish remover, or other salves or unguents; dislodge it with tweezers. Pull straight our without twisting. If the tick has been attached for some time, it's necessary to see a doctor or a health nurse for advice about symptoms. Mark the date on the calendar and if possible, save the tick for identification.

So, come to Town Hall parking lot at 12:30 on Sunday April 29th and help us make this the best Earth Day in Town history. But don't forget the other harbingers of spring: ticks, mosquitoes, and poison ivy along with the winter's collection of cans, bottles, and other trash in our public places.

Steve Bobo is a long-time member of the Cohasset Board of Health.

Slanetz's election view 'all wrong'

COMMENTARY

PAT WATERS

Mariner printed an on-line article calling write-in candidate Leonora Jenkins a "long time school supporter". By your tortured logic, the Mariner was supporting a "vicious" write-in campaign. Worse, since I disagree with Ms. Jenkins I was being labeled as "anti-school". Rhetorical excess may not be the highest form of political discourse but it isn't vicious. [totally separate is the issue of whether the Mariner should editorialize in its news stories]

Fourth, your suggestion that anyone was "disenfranchised" of their vote is so absurd and absent of any factual support that it is difficult to fathom what you were thinking. Did someone tell 80 percent (your figure) of the voters not to vote? Did someone stop them from voting? The fact of the matter is that a significant number of people where galvanized to vote for something they believe in. They were energized to become part of the process. There is nothing more democratic than that.

Fifth, you called out individuals by name and charged them with a "shameful lack of integrity, ethics, character and sense of fair play." You apparently either fail to understand the gravity of your charges or fail to understand that when you charge these individuals you charge all like-minded persons – including myself. I hold no personal animus against any individual candidate. I did, however, vigorously campaign for the two candidates who best reflected my views. I certainly am not ashamed. Your similarly outrageous commentary with regard to new board member Lucia Flibotte does more to open old wounds and undermine your Board's future effectiveness than any campaign slogans.

Lastly, more troubling than the utter lack of factual support for your commentary (as noted above) is the smug tone of moral superiority throughout. I might have respectfully disagreed with you on subjective matters like, the "tone" of local elections or how we discuss the relationship between town and schools had you not laid waste to so many good people with your sweeping declarations of ethical misconduct, educational inferiority and moral depravity.

I have known you to be an intelligent and thoughtful person. I can only believe that you wrote your commentary in haste and without consideration of all facts or the unintended consequences of your actions. Accordingly, I call upon you to make amends and publicly apologize for your inaccurate and personally damning charges.

Patrick Waters lives at 91 Aaron River Road.

SPECIAL TO MARINER

The Cohasset High School boys tennis team is off to a flying start this year jumping out to a 4-1 record overall and 2-0 in the South Shore League. The Skippers lone loss came Thursday, April 5, at the hands of 23-man strong Duxbury. The Dragons defeated Cohasset, 5-0.

Led by captains Chris Donze and Blain Morin, the team has demonstrated it has depth from first singles through second doubles.

At the start of the season, the battle for the number one position was divided between senior captain Morin, hard-hitting sophomore Victor Hartmann, and the steady, athletic junior Ryan Crough.

After the dust settled Hartmann won the top spot, Morin settled in at two, and Crough has proven to be very tough in the third position.

Donze and lanky, hard serving sophomore Ivan Sceery have developed into a potent first doubles duo.

Second doubles is an interesting combination of power, brains and finesse with the cannon serving Chris Ackley, kick servicing Owen Stevenson, and the steady freshman Mike Filbey. Filbey has posted a 3-1 record for the team.

Also making very big contributions at second doubles are undefeated Luke Brewer and Marc A'Antonio.

The highlights of the season thus far have included Chris Donze and Ivan Sceery's 4-6, 6-6, 4-6 loss to a very talented first doubles team of Duxbury's Stefan Seman and Ted Goldmacher. Hartmann also played well in defeat Duxbury. He lost at first singles 3-6, 5-7 to Sean Buike. Ryan Crough has posted the best overall record of 4-1 at third singles.

The most exciting match of the year came last week at Carver. Expecting a cakewalk, Hartmann sat the bench and Morin moved to the top spot with Crough playing second singles and captain's pick Owen Stevenson at third singles. Ackley and Filbey teamed together for the first time at first doubles, while the Brewer and D'Antonio team played at second doubles.

Rain, rain go away

Athletic director, coaches and players hope for brighter rest of spring

By Jarrod LeBlanc
JLEBLANC@CNC.COM

"They've been very creative with the ways they've been conducting practices indoors, especially given the amount of time we've been inside."
Cohasset High athletic director Ron Ford

The crack of the bat, the sound of a backhand, the contact of a face off, and the clickety-clack of spikes down a straightaway. Ah, the sights and sounds of spring. Not in New England though. Lately as a result of Mother Nature the only thing sports teams have been hearing is the echoing of their voices in gyms.

With the recent string of rain and wind Cohasset High School and practically all of the other high schools in New England have been forced to cancel games and head indoors for practice.

"I have to give the coaches a lot credit," seventh-year Cohasset High athletic director Ron Ford said Wednesday. "They've been very creative with the ways they've been conducting practices indoors, especially given the amount of time we've been inside."

For almost a week now Cohasset High School's eight teams – baseball, boys and girls lacrosse, softball, boys and girls tennis, and boys and girls track – have been splitting time in the gym and school conducting practices.

"We're very lucky that we have a big gym," Ford said. "Each team's been able to get about an hour of practice time in a day over the vacation. They're starting to go stir crazy though."

Luckily for the Skipper athletes Ford's been at this for a quite a while now otherwise things could have been a lot worse. As a result of Ford's pro-active thinking only five Cohasset games needed to be rescheduled due to the weather.

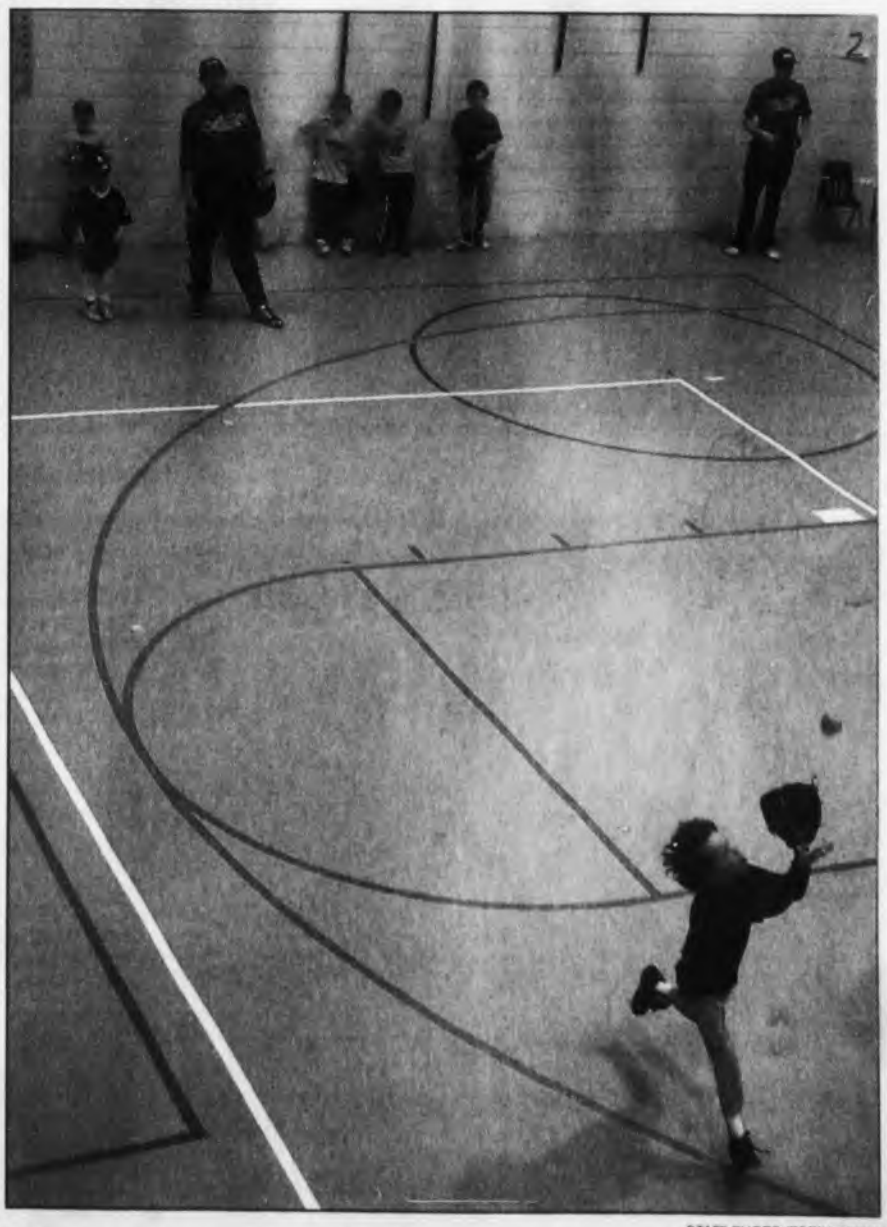
"Last Wednesday (April 11) when I saw that things were about to turn ugly, I moved as many of our games as possible to Wednesday rather than risking them being cancelled Thursday," Ford said. "It also helped that this past week was vacation, if it had been a normal week we would have anywhere up to 30 to 40 games to reschedule."

With the forecast calling for 60-degree, partly cloudy days for the next week it appears the Skippers should be able to take the fields and tracks once again.

The boys lacrosse team is scheduled to be the first team back in action as it heads to Marshfield today (Friday, April 20) for a 1 p.m. game against the Rams. Tuesday, April 24, the team hosts Abington at 4 p.m. before Friday's 4 p.m. game at Duxbury, which has won three straight Division 1 state titles and four of the last five.

The beginning of next week will be a busy one for the softball team. Monday, April 23, the girls travel to Hull for a 3:30 p.m. game. Tuesday they return home to host Harwich at 4 p.m. Then Wednesday the squad is on the road again this time at Hanover for a 3:30 p.m.game.

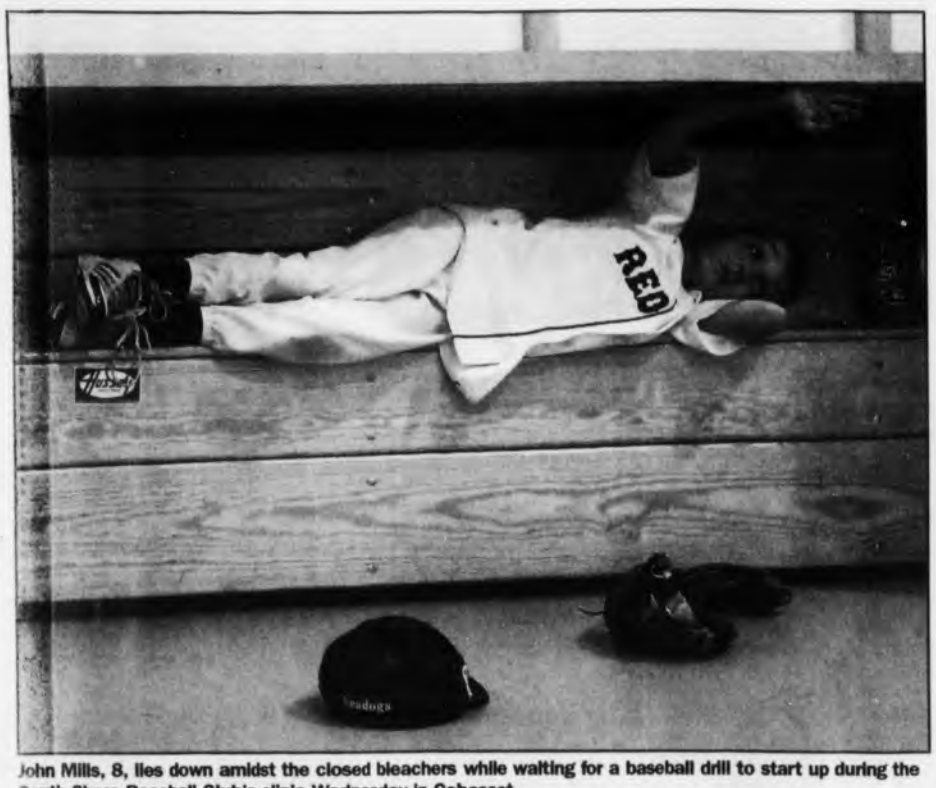
It will also be a busy time for the baseball team early on next week as it too is scheduled to play three games in three days starting Monday. First up for Cohasset is a 3:30 p.m. away game with East Bridgewater. Tuesday the boys travel over the to face Harwich at 4 p.m. Wednesday the team returns home to face Hull at 3:30 p.m.



The boys tennis team is on the road for both of its matches next week. Monday and Tuesday the squad heads over bridge to face Cape Cod Academy and Harwich. Both matches are at 4 p.m.

On the girls side of the net Cohasset will host Harwich at 4 p.m. Tuesday.

The girls lacrosse team will travel to Abington for a 4 p.m. game Tuesday. Thursday the squad hosts Duxbury at 3:30 p.m.



Both the boys and girls track teams will compete Thursday at East Bridgewater. Events are scheduled to get underway at 4 p.m.

Stars Squirt B's win cup at championship game

The Coastal Stars Squirt B team made this winter a little less chilling and a lot more thrilling! A season that started Friday, Aug. 25 and ended Thursday, April 12, has come to an end – a perfect end that is.

A 40 win season!

It all started when coach Dan Rice selected 15 players - not on talent - but on character and desire. He then selected a dream team coaching staff that fit his mode.

"Develop hockey players and if all goes well we'll win a few games along the way," Rice said at the beginning of the season. That was the understatement of the year.

After receiving a generous sponsorship from Maria Lahey this team was good to go. With 20 wins at the All-Star break, coach Paul McHugh hosted a Broom Ball tournament at the McHugh Forum. This revealed the competitive spirit of the player's parents: Sophie Rice: 16 goals and four assists.

Cheryl Lund received 39 penalty minutes and a game misconduct. Maria Lahey picked up the Best Soup award. Donna McKenzie took home the Hoby Baker award. But the player of the night was goalie Sue McHugh as she recoreded a .024 goals against average. This lightened the mood for the start of the second half of the season.

The second half of the season mirrored the first half - 17 wins with three playoff games to go. The Stars were sitting on top of their division entering the playoff stretch.

"You've got to skate with some swagger but you can't be too confident," coach Golden said about the Stars playoff chances.

"At the beginning of the year, we were almost too cocky and we started to believe all our press clippings - at which point the coaching staff had to pull in the reins," coach Lahey said about the Stars postseason chances.

The first game of the playoffs matched the Stars with a feisty team from Pembroke. This proved to be a lopsided event. Michael Lund, Curtis Golden, Adam Benson, Gunner McKenzie and Sam Rice all scored in this one. Brandon Winn, James Hussey, Rice and Teddy Craven all picked up assists. For the man behind the mask (goalie Liam McHugh) it was just another day at the office. McHugh rejected 22 shots and posted his 12th shut out of the season.

Next up, Duxbury, a worthy challenger. The Duxbury team was playing solid playoff hockey, but it couldn't resuscitate from the Stars suffocating C.P.R. Line: Calapa (Domenic), Prendergast (Tommy) and Russell (Santos). These three forwards played awe-inspiring two-way hockey for three full periods. Lund, Derek Benson and Golden all scored. The Duxbury squad was held to one goal - thanks again to an outstanding goalie performance from McHugh.

In the semifinal game, the Stars were pitted against an aggressive team from Braintree - playing with a lighting hot goaltender and a big front line. The Stars countered with the best defensive core in the league: The Department of Defense may not get the press clippings - however, they get results. James Hussey, Adam Benson, Declan Leahy, Jack Conlon and Gunner McKenzie were enormous all season long and today it was no different.

The Stars scored seven goals - in order: Curtis Golden, Russell Santos, Adam Benson, Golden (two), Michael Lund, Santos (two) and Sam Rice.

The stage was set for a Stanley Cup contest between the Stars and their rivals - the very talented Sea Hawks!

From the opening face-off, the Sea Hawks caught the Stars sleeping and scored the first goal 11 seconds into the contest. It's marked the first time the division champion Stars were behind in the playoffs. This deficit would last throughout the first period.

Overcoming a slow offensive start and then finding that special gear that only the great teams possess the Stars ran off a 5-0 spurt.

Sam Rice ignited the Stars offense by scoring off a textbook pass from Brandon Winn. After tying the score, the Stars settled down and went to work with tenacious back checking efforts from McKenzie, Leahy and Hussey. This combined with the leagues best offensive firepower - the Stars closed out the season with goals from, Adam Benson, Derek Benson, Lund and Teddy Craven.

Liam McHugh started the team's victory lap with the Stanley Cup raised above his head - to a chorus chant - MVP, MVP, MVP!

For the next 40 years - this combination of 15 boys will recant the greatest season ever - 40 wins!

Solid start for Skippers

FROM TENNIS, PAGE 17

Things went downhill fast. Stevenson fell at third singles to the athletic Joe Kaminske 6-2, 6-2. Crough had to fight hard to win his match against scrappy Tom Piepiora at second singles. Morin looked in control at first singles, but could not shut down Ed Hoey in straight sets and split 6-1, 4-6. Ackley and Filbey survived inconsistent play to tie the score 2-2.

Things looked very grim when Brewer and D'Antonio lost the first set 2-6. Brewer served consistently and made some great shots to win the second set, 6-4. D'Antonio took a little off his serve in the third set to come from behind and eke out a 6-4 victory over Smith and Barney thus giving Cohasset a 3-2 victory over the Crusaders.

Things will get much tougher for Cohasset after April vacation as it meets Cape Cod Academy, Harwich, Norwell and Mashpee. Monday, April 23, the boys travel over the bridge for a 4 p.m. match against Cape Cod Academy. The squad stays on the same road Tuesday, April 24, when it heads to Harwich for a 4 p.m. match. The boys get a break after the Harwich match as they are not scheduled to play again until Monday, April 30, when they host Norwell at Milliken Tennis Courts. The match is at 3:30 p.m.

'Hope, friendship and warm memories'

This is the third in a series. ASP is the Cohasset Appalachian Service Project Group, about 200 adult and high school student volunteers who, every summer, return to Kentucky, Tennessee and West Virginia to repair homes.

The more than twenty work crews consist of about seven to eight people: two adults and five or six students. They spend a lot of time together, and with the families they are helping. These are the on-site journal entries of our Cohasset volunteers. (Note: To protect the privacy of the families neither real names nor photos can be used.)

COURTESY PHOTO

This team spent all week together during last year's ASP and did not want to say goodbye.

Bonding

"Thirteen hours on a bus and now eight in a van…the van ride is definitely more fun." — Student Volunteer

"Wow, what a fun week. Being my first year on ASP, I'm really glad I had such a great time. After a long bus ride our van quickly bonded, naming ourselves the 'VEGAS VAN'. The rest of the week was all smiles and laughs and I have to thank my crew and the center for that." — Student Volunteer

"Day Two: Left the center with "All Night Long" blasting — all of us chain dancing as we rolled away ready for another awesome day. I'm still in awe of the crew — Erin is superwoman with that drill — you go girl. Vanessa — watch out with that measuring tape, you are unreal! Mike was youth leader for the day and was quite good at telling Frank and I what to do. Left the site feeling hot, tired, dirty and very satisfied." — Student Volunteer

"We're the coolest crew around. John almost died from choking on a Whopper. May whacked Meesh in the head with her chair in attempts to recline. The girls are still in charge of the roof. We've invited the whole street to the cookout [Center and Families Mid-Week Picnic]! Amazing!" — Student Volunteer

"Jon is a funny son of a gun who adds to our day. Matt is such a special kid, always willing to help. Olivia, Michelle, Nikki define teamwork. Great crew." — Adult Leader

We brought hope, friendship, new knowledge and warm memories.
Student Volunteer

"Despite all of the hardships, our crew pulled together and became friends with each other. The friendships made with the crew and the daughter of the family, were definitely the best parts of the trip." — Student Volunteer

Hard Work, Hope and Friendship

"Yesterday was our last evening service. As I sat there I thought of our family and all the ways we touched them. We brought hope, friendship, new knowledge and warm memories. We also brought our hard work and left behind an almost-finished bathroom. These people had next to nothing and I believe they, to an extent, were happier than most of us." — Student Volunteer

"OMG! Today was the last day at the work site. Tina [family member] and I were bawling. She and I became really close. Along with the rest of the crew. I love all of those guys. I let myself get really attached and now I have so many new friends and people I will never ever forget! 143 Smith family, I love you all! ASP Crew for life

"All of us have fallen in love with the family and especially Lannie's 4-month old baby, David. He is the sweetest baby in the world and never fusses. He seems to cry only when he wants food or is teething. Sarah, the momma of the house is awesome and has a very open heart. She is an amazing person, consistently happy and good-spirited." — Student Volunteer

Making Connections and Memories

"Some things I'll never forget are our morning stops at Bulan Gas Station to get food and play the Kentucky Lottery, the goat in the yard, lunches at the most colorful graveyard I've ever seen, bathroom trips to Grandmas, the hornets and wasps. There's so much, but one thing that I'll always remember is the last day we left work site, when Rita (who I felt we didn't make a strong connection with) came out crying. Scott [her husband] handed us a card saying "Friends 4-Ever." ASP gave me friends and memories I can never forget." — Student Volunteer

Look for the ASP Journal next week for the ride home and the final reflections of our volunteers. And make plans for Saturday Night, April 28 at the Appalachia County Fair at the St. Anthony Parish Center. Dinner by Redbones BBQ. Music and Dancing by The Gr8fls, Silent and Live Auction. Tickets are available through Cohasset churches, or by contacting Rev. Gary Ritts, 718 383 0345, gar@2ndcc.org

Dance with Caroline — The Cohasset Recreation Department will offer a dance workshop, directed by Caroline Carr, from Monday, June 18 through Thursday, June 21, at the Town Hall Auditorium.

The program will run from 3 to 4:30 p.m., for boys and girls ages 7 and up. Basic jazz and hip hop dance technique will be included. Emphasis will be placed upon developing a healthy, active lifestyle and building strength, flexibility and endurance, as well as feeling good and having fun.

Participants are encouraged to come in comfortable attire. Bring a bottle of water, a snack and an open mind. The price is $80 per person. Registration forms are available in the foyer of the Town Hall or by calling the Recreation Department at 781-383-4109.

Boot Camp — The Cohasset Recreation Department will offer a bi-weekly adult Boot Camp Fitness Training Program with instructor, Betsy Callanan.

This unique physical training opportunity will meet from 6 to 7 a.m., Tuesdays and Thursdays starting Tuesday, June 12 through Thursday, Aug. 16, on the Common in front of Town Hall. The fee is $100 and checks can be made payable to the Town of Cohasset. You may register by calling the Recreation Dept. at 781-383-4109.

Betsy will run an interval calisthenic and running fitness program for both men and women of all levels of ability. While running and/or walking remains an essential aspect of this cardiovascular training format, inclusive will be various integrated calisthenics such as jump roping, stairs or hills, squat thrusts, lunges, push-ups, skipping/running knees, sit-ups and more. Betsy has designed this program to improve cardiovascular endurance and strength.

It is recommended that participants dress in layers as weather conditions dictate, bring a water bottle and jump rope and wear running shoes. Success in this class will be based on participant's individual personal best, not as a competition with others.

'End of Suburbia' to be shown April 23

Sustainable Cohasset will show the second film in its three part series at 7 p.m., on Monday, April 23, in the Community Room at Paul Pratt Memorial Library. Refreshments will be served.

The film titled "The End of Suburbia" addresses the emerging peak oil crisis. Peak oil can be defined as the last gush of easily accessible oil. The remaining and dwindling oil supplies will be eked out of the earth's core at a much higher cost to all involved. The film makes the viewer aware of the average American's assumption of an endless supply of cheap oil that literally fueled the growth of suburbia in the '50s. The post World War II American Dream was defined by a flight to a totally auto and oil dependent suburban life style. The film uses interesting retro '50s footage to illustrate the final seduction and entrapment in suburban America.

Kunstler's thesis is that oil production peaked in the 1970s in the U.S. and that worldwide oil production is peaking in this year of 2007.

James Howard Kunstler, author of "The Long Emergency," who spoke at Bridgewater State College recently, is featured in the film. Kunstler's thesis is that oil production peaked in the 1970s in the U.S. and that worldwide oil production is peaking in this year of 2007.

Although the cancerous effects of greenhouse gases on the planet may not fully manifest themselves until the end of the century, the problem of a society severed from cheap oil will impact society in as short a time frame as 15, blink-your-eyes, years. Ironically, even as awareness, consensus and solidarity about global warming emerge in America, people stand to be tragically blind-sided as a society as another equally serious crisis looms on the horizon.

'Weather Eye' exhibit opens at Hull Lifesaving Museum

Hull Lifesaving Museum has opened an exhibit titled "Keeping a Weather Eye: Shipwrecks and Lifesaving in Boston Harbor." Exploring stories of shipwrecks and lifesaving in Boston Harbor, from the early days of the Massachusetts Humane Society to the present day Coast Guard, the Lifesaving Museum's new exhibit focuses on the daring exploits of Joshua James and the famous Surfmen at Hull's Point Allerton U.S. Life Saving Station. The exhibit includes rare photographs and newspaper accounts, first-hand descriptions of shipwrecks in the words of the victims and lifesavers themselves, and 19th century film footage.

The Hull Lifesaving Museum is located at 1117 Nantasket Ave. For information, call 781-925-5433.

Excerpt from the Point Allerton U.S. Lifesaving Station Log April 8, 1894:

"The wind and sea increasing, thinking it probable the vessel would drag and part chains, sent a man with horses for our Beach Apparatus. Launched boat, taking two volunteers with us, and tried to reach her. The sea rushed in with such velocity, [we were] unable to reach her and [were] driven back to the beach where we took two more MHS crew and started anew. When nearly out to her, she commenced striking bottom, swinging around broadside, breaking the schooner some, so that we were able to get near enough for one man to jump into [the] boat. On getting nearer the second time, the remainder of the crew, five in number, jumped all at once for the boat, one man falling overboard. We were fortunate and got him. Started for shore and made a good landing.

The crew were taken to the Station and provided with dry clothing – also with food. Less than two hours after taking off this crew, the vessel went to pieces and is strewn along the beach. This schooner was the Mary A. Hood from Philadelphia for Bath, Maine, with iron pipe." – Joshua James, Keeper.

DESTINATIONS

Bath: A city for the ages

By Donna Tunney

BATH, England – One million people visit the ruins of the Roman baths in this city each year, but that isn't the destination's only draw. For literary buffs, the Jane Austen Centre is a major attraction, and the city's stunning Georgian architecture inspires professionals and laymen alike.

The Roman ruins, however, are why most people come here. The therapeutic use of the waters in the Bath region of southwestern England dates to pre-Roman times, but it was the Romans who cultivated the springs and built an impressive bathing complex. As the Roman Tacitus put it in 80 A.D.: "It's one of those luxuries that stimulate to vice."

He was right. In the social culture of the 1970s, those who frequented the baths became, for lack of a better word in a family newspaper, unruly, and Britain's National Health Service officially shut them down in 1978. Today, visitors can only tour the ruins by buying a ticket to the Roman Bath Museum, a truly fascinating facility, even though one must steer clear of the water.

The Crescent, dating from the late 18th century, is a magnet for tourists.

Visitors can tour the ancient Roman baths. A modern spa complex is located nearby.

Now, however, there's a new spa in town. In the mid-1990s, the city began planning to tap the hot springs that fed the Roman baths and build a modern spa. It took a decade to develop, and last summer the Thermae Bath Spa finally opened. It has indoor and outdoor thermal spa bathing; steam rooms; massage and treatment rooms; a restaurant; and an interpretation center. The warm mineral waters are pumped from springs below the city into all of the baths, making even the open-air rooftop pool usable year round in chilly England.

Just over an hour from London by train, Bath is easily accessible and tourist friendly, with the major attractions all within walking distance of one another.

The arts

Bath has long been the inspiration for many artists and writers, including the city's most famous resident, Jane Austen. To celebrate this and to encourage further creativity, 2007 is shaping up to be a bumper year for arts festivals in Bath, including Bath Literature Festival March 3 to 11; the International Music Festival May 18 to June 3; Taste of Bath June 28 to July 1, and the Jane Austen Festival Sept. 21 to 30.

The Jane Austen Centre is a permanent exhibition housed in a Georgian townhouse that tells the story of Austen's Bath experience and the effect that living here had on her and her writing.

Her knowledge of the city is best reflected in two of her novels, "Northanger Abbey" and "Persuasion," both of which are largely set in Bath.

The city is still very much as Austen knew it, as city planners, thankfully, have done little to alter its Victorian charm.

Look up

The city is renowned for its Georgian architecture, which is best seen in the Crescent, an extraordinary building that takes its name from its shape —a half-moon. It was built in the early 1770s, and part of it now is under the supervision of the Bath Preservation Trust. Some sections still serve as residences, and there's at least one very upscale hotel operating in it – The Royal Crescent. Be prepared to pay several hundred dollars per night there.

For those on a tighter budget, a wide range of lodgings are available in the city. A stay at the Queensberry proved convenient for touring and is home to one of the top restaurants in the city, the Olive Tree.

Located on Russel Street, a short walk from the Roman Bath Museum and the downtown shopping district, the hotel has 22 rooms that rent for about $250 per night – about an average rate for a three-star hotel in this town.

It occupies three Regency-era townhouses. Guest rooms are located on the second and third floors. (Those who want to avoid stairs should request second-floor rooms because the hotel elevator only goes that far.)

Better views of the city and surrounding hills, however, are seen from third-floor rooms. In good weather, guests have access to a private outdoor terrace accessible through the bar lounge. It also has a cozy sitting room with a fireplace and smaller sitting rooms off the lounge.

Rates include breakfast. Reservations can be made by calling (800) 323-5463 or by visiting its website at www.thequeensberry.co.uk.

Native American culture is topic in Abbey series

Glastonbury Abbey Inter-Religious Lecture Series, "Listening to Other Voices: the Fears that Bind Us," will present a talk by Joyce Rain Anderson titled "Story-Telling: A Way to Your True Self – For Native Americans and Others." The lecture will take place at 7:15 p.m., on Thursday, May 3, at Glastonbury Abbeys Conference Center.

What's it like to try to preserve the Native American culture in a society that may think about it only on Thanksgiving, if at all? Anderson will talk about how one survives, fights to keep an identity and spirituality and strives to keep fears for the future of her culture at bay.

Poet/teacher/speaker Anderson, a specialist in the American Indian, has a doctorate degree in English and is a Wampanoag tribe member. She will describe how the art of storytelling inspires confidence and integrity and defies ignorance. She's taught American Indian rhetoric, English as a Second Language, Native American studies and Northeast Native American studies. She's composed, edited and taught in a variety of forms and formats.

The lecture is free, but donations are welcome. Reservations are recommended. For reservations and more information, call 781-749-2155.

New pastor off to running start

Was Assistant Rector at St. Stephen's

By Matt Dunning
MDUNNING@CNC.COM

If the Boston Red Sox think they're in a pressure cooker this season, they ought to try taking the reins of a parish at the cusp of one of the busiest times in the Christian year.

Ten weeks ago, St Andrew's Episcopal Church in Hanover welcomed its newest priest, Reverend Elizabeth Wheatley Dyson, just days before entering into the Lent season.

During an interview on Good Friday (April 6), Dyson – who is the former Assistant Rector of St. Stephen's in Cohasset — said she's enjoyed her first few weeks at St. Andrew's, however hectic they may have been.

"It's typically a very busy time in the church year, because in addition to all the Lent programs, you have all the Confirmation preparations, and we were doing our Ecumenical discussion series at the time, so it was walking into one of the busiest times of the year," Dyson said.

What's made it worth the work, she said, has been the people — all of them, young and old — she's encountered in her first two months as St. Andrew's new pastor.

"The people here have been really supportive, and really very friendly and welcoming," Dyson said. "It's been great, really busy, but great."

A Fairhaven native and Hanson resident, Dyson is a relative newcomer to the clergy. A mere six years ago, she was working as an assistant principal at Abington High School. She had formerly been a high school language teacher, leading not sermons, but lessons in French, Spanish and German. During her third year in the assistant's principal's position, Dyson said she began to feel what she described as not necessarily discontent with her station in life, but rather a certain feeling that there was something else she ought to be doing.

"I loved working with the kids, and with all the staff at the high school, but I was starting to feel restless," Dyson said. "I ended up taking this class at All Saints [Episcopal Church] in Whitman called 'God-sized tasks,' and we were asked to meditate on what our own God-sized task could be. All the sudden being a priest just popped into my head."

Dyson said when she sought the advice of her own pastor, she was given the affirmation she had been looking for.

"When I asked him about it, he told me he'd been waiting three years for me to talk to him about becoming a priest," Dyson said. "It was all very providential."

Now that she's settling in to her new surroundings, Dyson said she's focused on the future of St. Andrew's, and what it will mean to the communities the church services. Drawing its parishioners from Hanover, Norwell and Pembroke, Dyson said she hopes to see the church expand its community outreach programs in the coming months and years.

"I really want to work on the outreach aspect of the church, not only globally, but balancing that with helping this surrounding area," Dyson said. "Really, we want to try to be more visible in the community, and seek out the needs of the community and see where we can help. Simple things like a vintage clothing sale and a chili cook-off, simple things like that that can be fun and engage the community, and at the same time help some of the people in these towns."

By a strange coincidence, Dyson is not the only priest in her family. In fact, she isn't even the only Reverend Elizabeth Dyson in her family. Dyson's cousin, Elizabeth Wheatley Jones, is an Episcopal priest in Bay St. Louis, Miss. In June, Dyson plans to lead a group of young volunteers — mostly ninth and 10th graders from Hanover High School — to her cousin's parish to help in the ongoing Hurricane Katrina relief efforts in the Mississippi delta.

"It's kind of an odd story," Dyson said. "Her first day down there was the day after Katrina hit."

Jones, Dyson explained, had been a finalist to be the rector of a church in Bay St. Louis, and finally got the position the day after Katrina leveled most of southern Louisiana and Mississippi. The church she had been trying so hard to be assigned to was completely demolished in the hurricane, and ever since, Jones has been heading up the Mission on the Bay reclamation project, a youth volunteer organization dedicated to eventually rebuilding the church.

"We're going to go down there in late June," Dyson said. "As for what exactly the kids will be doing, I'm not really sure yet. I've been told it's going to be anything from light carpentry, to debris work, to painting. Their estimating its going to take them about 10 years to rebuild the town, so every little bit we can do to help, we're glad to do it."

Band's rock and roll here to stay

Sha Na Na performs at Company Theatre

By R. Scott Reedy
CORRESPONDENT

Sha Na Na

There were many college students among the half-million people at Woodstock in the summer of 1969, but, as the drummer for Sha Na Na, John "Jocko" Marcellino - then a freshman at New York's Columbia University - was among the very few who actually performed at the now legendary music festival.

"At 18 years old, I was the youngest person to play Woodstock," recalled Marcellino by telephone last week from his home in La Jolla, California. "Janis Joplin, The Who, Joan Baez, Bob Dylan, The Grateful Dead and Jimi Hendrix were just a few of the amazing people who gathered at Max Yasgur's farm that August. After the assassinations of John and Bobby Kennedy and Dr. Martin Luther King, the ongoing Vietnam War, and the trouble at the 1968 Democratic National Convention in Chicago, Woodstock marked the end of a very volatile decade."

John "Jocko" Marcellino

And the beginning of a very long, lucrative music and acting career for the Quincy-born Marcellino who was president of the Class of 1968 and a star football player at Archbishop Williams High School in Braintree. Marcellino and his classmates-turned-bandmates from Columbia first performed under the name The Kingsmen, before donning leather jackets and greasing back their hair to form Sha Na Na. Marcellino — who will be front and center when Sha Na Na plays Norwell's Company Theatre May 12-13 — recalls that it was some early club dates which led the doo wop-style band to be invited to perform at the seminal rock concert of the 1960s counter-culture movement.

"Part of what keeps us going is that multi-generations of the same family share a love for what we do."
John "Jocko" Marcellino

"In those very early days, we played a club in Hell's Kitchen called Steve Paul's Scene. It was a real hangout for rock and rollers like Joplin and Hendrix. We were playing the club's closing night when we were approached about Woodstock. We were the only act without a recording contract, and probably the only real unknowns, invited to perform. We kept getting bumped, but finally they put us on just before Jimi Hendrix who closed the show."

A documentary film of the event titled "Woodstock: Three Days of Peace and Music," directed by Michael Wadleigh and edited by Academy Award winners Martin Scorcese and Thelma Schoonmaker, was released in 1970 and went on to win an Academy Award for Best Documentary Feature. While the film focused on the best-known performers, it also included footage of Sha Na Na singing "At the Hop." The group soon had a recording contract and a permanent place in the annals of American pop music.

"We had a sense of history even then. We knew we were playing the culmination of Woodstock Nation and as young as we were, we knew how momentous that was."

It was just the first in a series of career-defining moments for Sha Na Na. The group's catchy moniker also became the name for their highly successful television variety series which ran in syndication from 1977 to 1981. It was during the run of the show that the band was cast to play the fictional rock group Johnny Casino and the Gamblers in the 1978 feature film version of "Grease," starring John Travolta and Olivia Newton-John.

"It was funny when we landed the film, because we had turned down the show when it was first being developed off-Broadway in the early 1970s. We ended up with more songs on the 'Grease' soundtrack — including 'Rock & Roll is Here to Stay,' 'Blue Moon,' 'Tears on My Pillow' and 'Sandy,' co-written for Travolta by our own Screamin' Scott Simon — than any other group."

Almost 40 years after Woodstock, and 30 years since they shared a soundstage with Travolta, Sha Na Na — complete with original members Marcellino and Donny York, plus Simon, who joined shortly after the band was formed, and five other members, each with more than 20 years service — is still going strong with no plans to slow down.

"Part of what keeps us going is that multi-generations of the same family share a love for what we do. There are also people all over the world who enjoy our kind of music," explains Marcellino. "What we play aren't oldies, they are just great songs being played now.

Sha Na Na will be at the Company Theatre, 30 Accord Park Drive, Norwell, on May 12-13. For tickets and information, visit the box office, call 781-871-2787, or go online at www.companytheatre.com.

Movie review

Pam (Rose McGowan) takes a moment to admire the mysterious Stuntman Mike's (Kurt Russell) paint job.

Three-hour 'Grind'

Grindhouse (C+)

By James Verniere
FILM CRITIC

Flesh-eating zombies, secret government experiments, "Werewolves of the SS," Detroit muscle, a psycho killer behind the wheel of a death machine, sexy stuntwomen and terminal-stage STDs.

Welcome to "Grindhouse," where it's a blast 25 percent of the time. The rest of the time, it's just a grind.

A three-hour-plus tribute to the double-bill sleaze-athons of the 1970s, "Grindhouse" reunites "Sin City" directors Robert Rodriguez and Quentin Tarantino in a celebration of movies so bad they were good. The results are a decidedly mixed good/bad bag with Rodriguez faithfully, if without inspiration, resurrecting the gorehound extravaganzas of zombie-master George Romero ("Night of the Living Dead"), while Tarantino channels such need-for-speed grindhouse classics as "Vanishing Point" (1971).

"Planet Terror," Rodriguez's installment, is an occasionally amusing, if disappointingly literal revival of the kind of dreck you were likely to see at a 42nd Street grindhouse.

Rose McGowan (TV's "Charmed") plays go-go dancer Cherry Darling, who loses a leg to zombies and replaces it with an automatic rifle.

Jokes aside, I couldn't help but wonder how she fired the thing. But McGowan is certainly game and unquestionably looks the part. The role calls for bad acting, and she delivers.

Tarantino's second installment, "Death Proof," is better, although it's a 30-minute muscle of bulging, bad-movie love encased in 55 minutes of Tarantino (who also acts) trash-talking fat.

Featuring a bevy of beauties, the film celebrates Tarantino's legendary foot fetish and gives us the most inspired creation of "Grindhouse," a psycho killer by the name of Stuntman Mike.

As played by the former Snake Plissken of John Carpenter's 1981 grindhouse classic "Escape From New York," Stuntman Mike is the most hilarious serial killer in recent memory, and he does a fine impression of John Wayne. "Death Proof" also delivers a terrific non-CGI car chase, although I believe George Miller's "Road Warrior" (1981) is still tops.

Viewers will also spot Michael Parks (TV's "Then Came Bronson"), Nic Cage in a cameo as Fu Manchu, and makeup expert and actor Tom Savini. Among the standouts are Freddy Rodriguez ("Bobby") as a zombie-killing truck driver, Barbara Crampton look-alike Marley Shelton and Zoe Bell, Uma Thurman's "Kill Bill" stuntwoman, as one of Tarantino's avenging goddesses.

Other pleasures of "Grindhouse" include the gruesome death of a character played by Tarantino in "Planet Terror" and "prevues" of such films as "Machete," a revenge drama featuring an illegal Mexican worker turned hit man (Danny Trejo), and the aforementioned "Werewolves of the SS."

It's a howl, Mein Fuhrer.

Rated R. "Grindhouse" contains extreme violence, nudity and profanity.

DENNIS B. SULLIVAN
ATTORNEY AT LAW, CPA

BECAUSE YOU HAVE A TRUST... YOU MUST ATTEND THIS FREE WORKSHOP!!!

If you have a trust agreement, I have some bad news for you; your trust is probably outdated. Trusts drafted by many attorneys do not contain the protective provisions we included in our recently developed "Life Plan™". How do I know? Last year I gave numerous workshops throughout the state and will even offer $1,000 to anyone who can present an estate plan that contains all 19 of the protective provisions we currently use when designing a plan. Most estate plans had fewer than 3 of these provisions. Only one estate plan even came close to having all 19 provisions. Consider this…

THIS YEAR YOU ARE SIX TIMES MORE LIKELY TO BECOME DISABLED THAN DIE!

This alarming statistic shouldn't surprise you…you see it every day. Unfortunately, the number of people becoming disabled will double in the next decade. Your trust was designed to deal with death not disability, but that can be corrected.

A LAWSUIT IS FILED EVERY THIRTY SECONDS – MORE THAN 90 MILLION ARE FILED IN THE UNITED STATES EACH YEAR

Your trust can be modified to protect the surviving spouse's interest in the Decedent's estate from frivolous lawsuits. Currently, it is only designed to reduce estate taxes. Would you like it to do both?

MOST POWERS OF ATTORNEY ARE OUTDATED WHEN PRESENTED (MANY ARE NOT EVEN AVAILABLE)

Your Power of Attorney is used to allow someone to act on your behalf when you are disabled. Unfortunately, these documents keep becoming outdated. The comprehensive version we previously used was revised in 3 major areas after the Terri Schiavo case. Assuming your document is current, will it be available in an emergency? Hospitals report in 3 out of 4 cases the Patients' Health Care Proxy is not available when needed. Our new program makes this document accessible 24 hours a day, 7 days a week via the telephone.

IN 2001, MORE YOUNG PEOPLE FILED FOR BANKRUPTCY THAN GRADUATED FROM COLLEGE!

The amount of assets that will be inherited by the next generation is staggering. Unfortunately, the amount our children or beneficiaries will lose due to financial difficulties such as bankruptcy, lawsuits and divorce will be just as staggering. If you could distribute your estate in such a way as to protect your children or beneficiaries from their creditors for life... would you? I would be surprised if you said no. After all, isn't that why your trust was created in the first place?

MOST ESTATES DON'T MAKE IT TO THE GRANDCHILDREN!

If you can protect your estate during the life of your children, then it will be available for your grandchildren. Wouldn't it be nice if your estate, whatever is left, could then transfer estate tax free to your grandchildren? It can, we just need to put the appropriate language in the document.

THE BIGGEST THREAT TO YOUR ESTATE IS NO LONGER PROBATE & TAXES...

IT'S DISABILITY, OUTDATED DOCUMENTS UNPROTECTED DISTRIBUTIONS...

DUE TO RECENT CHANGES, YOUR LIVING TRUST COULD BECOME A LIVING HELL.

WE HAVE DEVELOPED A SOLUTION FOR EVERY PROBLEM!

ATTEND OUR FREE WORKSHOP

Call our office at 800-964-4295 to reserve seating for this important workshop. During this call we will inform you of the exact location of the workshop. At this workshop you will learn the details about your trust that perhaps your attorney never explained. We'll explain the new laws that directly affect your estate planning documents, and how to take steps to correct these problems. All those in attendance will receive a 19-point checklist for a "self analysis" of their estate planning documents. As a bonus, if you bring this advertisement to the workshop you will receive a FREE REPORT on the new (February 2006) Medicaid Laws. You will discover how to protect your home and assets from increasing medical and nursing home costs, taxes, and the costs and time delays of probate.

YOU CANNOT STOP THE WORLD FROM CHANGING...BUT YOU CAN USE NEW TECHNIQUES TO PROTECT YOU AND YOUR LOVED ONES.

Don't wait until you actually have a problem before you deal with it. By waiting until the problem happens you typically can only minimize the damage, rather than prevent it. Let's prevent it! By attending this FREE workshop you will receive a 19-point review of your existing trust, or a review of your estate planning goals and help creating a personalized plan. We will tell you the areas of vulnerability your estate has and how to protect your assets.

- Clients of Dennis Sullivan & Associates do not qualify, as many of their trusts address each of these issues.
- Any Attorneys and/or Financial Advisors in attendance will be charged a fee of $1,000.

Commission promises better communication

Meets with plant abutters about overflow events

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

The Sewer Commission held a meeting at 4 p.m. Monday to air concerns over the recent Waste Water Treatment Plant overflow. About 15 neighbors and concerned citizens attended. The at times emotionally charged discussion centered on increased communication, needed plant upgrades, and the Little Harbor project.

"I'm hoping to keep this meeting as positive as possible," said Chairman Sean Cunning to open the dialogue. "We're all on the same side here."

On Patriots Day, April 16, the Waste Water Treatment Plant on Elm Street began overflowing around 2a.m. The high rate of water flow, which reportedly peaked at 1,000 gallon per minute, left the plant unable to systematically process all the water. The overflow amount, about 80,000 gallons, went into the anoxic tank where it was partially decontaminated by chlorine tablets.

Sewer Commission John Beck said this year's overflow was a significant improvement over what happened last year in the Mother's Day flood. Following that incident a standard operating procedure was put in place for an overflow event. The Sewer Commission and consultant engineer Dan Coughlin reported that the procedure was followed internally, but the portion outlining notification of the neighbors was not followed. A Connect-CTY call was placed townwide on Monday afternoon.

The plant is manned 24-hours-a-day, employees were aware that significant

Eagle Scout makes a concession

Builds refreshment stand for alumni field

For many years booster club members, students and other dedicated souls have braved the wind, rain and freezing temperatures to sell concessions at high school sporting events in an effort to raise money for their causes. Now, thanks to Eagle Scout John Keniley they will sell their water and snacks in a spacious, protected and fully wired concession stand.

Keniley was awarded the Eagle Scout rank on April 4 in a Court of Honor ceremony, receiving the Eagle Scout rank is the highest honor a Boy Scout can attain. It is a performance-based achievement that requires qualifying for 21 merit badges and undertaking a project of over more than hours that will to benefit the community. In addition to those requirements, the Boy Scout needs to be a "good person," says Keniley.

"Luckily, Boy Scouts teaches you to be a good person," says Keniley. He was inspired to build a concession stand by his parents who were two of those booster club parents who stood out in all weather conditions selling refreshments to fans at football games.

The wheels began turning on the project in the fall of 2005 when he started talking with school administration and the School Committee about the project. They gave him

Cohasset honors Earth Day with cleanup

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

"The environment needs to be a unifying issue and that speaks to the way the problem will be solved."
— Kathryn Earle, Sustainable Cohasset

Earth Day will be observed in Cohasset a week late this year on Sunday, April 29. In addition to a town-wide clean-up effort organized by a local Girl Scout troop, the CO2 Cube constructed by Cohasset High School students will have its very first public display on the town common. The awareness raised during this annual day is reinforced locally all year long by a group called Sustainable Cohasset.

Thirty-seven years ago on April 20, 1970 the United States celebrated the very first Earth Day — now it is celebrated annually around the world. It was established to raise awareness of the growing environmental problems in the country — polluted rivers caught fire, cities were covered in smog and unsafe pesticides were widely used.

"Today, we see America shifting to a 'green culture,' where all 300 million citizens are embracing the fact that environmental responsibility is everyone's responsibility," said EPA Administrator Steve Johnson. With growing concern over global warming and the longevity of the environment, Sustainable Cohasset is promoting and educating the town's residents of the big and small ways.

Sustainable Cohasset was started in October 2006 and in just a few short months it has involved more than 40 residents. The group is a part of a greater South Shore coalition, Sustainable South Shore, and that group is chapter of the Mass Climate Action Network, which involves over 25 community

Schools have safety plans in place

Have protocols for 10 different situations

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

Safety is paramount at the Cohasset Public Schools.

In response to the Virginia Tech tragedy last week, the nation is all a little more aware of how important it is to have resources and protocols established in the event any type of threat is made on a school — and to have channels available to prevent a devastating incident.

"I can guarantee we have a comprehensive plan in place," says Superintendent of Schools Denise Walsh. Administrators and teachers put a 22-page document together in 2002 outlining the schools' safety plan including emergency management, crisis intervention and a resource guide.

The guide outlines what duties administrators, or the "crisis response team," and teachers are responsible for performing in possible scenarios where the school, or its students, may be threatened. Roles are designated to specific people and defined in detail. These roles vary from first-aid responders to sweep team coordinators to media coordinators. Each of the three schools has its own crisis response team.

"I'm most proud that our own teachers and staff put this plan together," said Walsh. The plan is updated on an annual basis; it was reviewed most recently in October 2006. The team did extensive research on what other schools and towns had for an emergency response plan and adapted those ideas to fit the Cohasset Public Schools.

The School Safety Plan includes protocols for 10 different situations, each posing a different type of danger to the school. Immediate threats such as a bomb threat received by phone or a suspicious device is located would likely involve evacuation of the building. Steps are delineated for the administrator-in-charge involving calling 911, activating the crisis response team, turning off the bell and PA systems. In the event of a bomb threat the fire alarm would not be used to evacuate the building, the crisis response team would go to each classroom in a set order to inform the staff of immediate evacuation.

Other procedures involve a lockdown, where students and teachers would be sequestered in their classrooms and await crisis response team instructions.

Procedures are also outlined for the event of a bus accident, kidnapping or a missing student, the death of a student or staff member, disruptive student, hostage or armed intruder situation, natural/environmental disasters, nuclear, biological, chemical incidents (inside or outside of the school), student with a gun, suicide (attempted or actual), and trespasser. Each situation has a general procedure outlined as well as specific instructions for the administrator-in-charge and teachers/staff to follow.

"These procedures are followed on a regular basis," says Walsh. The schools have different mock simulations of what would happen if there was an actual threat on the school to familiarize the students and staff with the procedure(s), Walsh said.

A framework is also outlined as to how the school staff and students can cultivate a better school environment. School staff is advised to "support school curricula that provides students with the knowledge and skills that promote personal, interpersonal, and community safety." The guidelines (a list of 12) also advises to create safe ways for students to express feelings and share concerns and have a system in place to identify "at-risk" students and initiate an appropriate intervention plan.

Students are encouraged to "end the conspiracy of silence" that can allow guns and weapons into the school as well as reporting situations that could endanger the schools, its students or staff.

In addition to the handbook on school safety, each school also has an extensive surveillance system. There are security cameras for the perimeters of each school building and there are some cameras inside the schools, says Walsh. The schools have also instituted a buzzer system so every visitor must be buzzed into the school by the front office. All visitors are required to sign-in at the front office of the school after being buzzed into the building.

Walsh says all the video is recorded digitally and can be viewed by herself, principals and the facilities manager. The police currently do not have access to the video feed, but Walsh reported that that link was in the works.

"The video is used as necessary. The information is used by the police department as well as the school," in the event of an incident, says Walsh.

The surveillance systems were upgraded as one of the last acts of the School Buildings Committee, they authorized increased security systems for the schools before disbanding, says Walsh. The latest of the enhancements, a $65,000 security system was installed at the Osgood School last summer.

Walsh said that school safety is a coordination of effort within the school and with other town departments, including police and fire officials.

POLICE BEAT

Suspicious man robs woman of wallet

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Police are looking for a suspect who apparently took the wallet out of the purse that was in a woman's shopping cart at Stop and Shop.

A 66-year-old Scituate woman told police that she was pushing her carriage when a white man described as being in his late 60s or early 70s and wearing a scully cap bumped into her. He made some small talk, said "excuse me," and then both he and she went on their way.

When she went through the checkout line, she discovered that her wallet was missing. The incident occurred at about 3:15 p.m. on Wednesday (April 18), police said.

She put her order aside, went out to check her car, and then remembered that a man had bumped into her. Her pocketbook was in her carriage at the time.

Police detectives are reviewing the surveillance video at Stop & Shop in the hope that they come up with a suspect.

Warrant arrest

A Bourne man was held overnight at the station before being transported to Quincy District Court on a warrant for breaking and entering in the nighttime, police said.

On Wednesday (April 18) at about 7:45 p.m., Scituate police reported a red Dodge Durango was being operated erratically northbound on Route 3A. Cohasset police stopped the vehicle by Cohasset Plaza. The operator checked out OK and was not impaired. However, a computer check revealed the man was wanted on a felony warrant and he was arrested.

Impeded operation

A Cohasset woman notified police on her cell phone at about 4:53 p.m. on Monday (April 16) that she was behind a Ford Taurus that was swerving and weaving on Route 3A in the vicinity of 3A and Pond Street. The caller was able to provide police with a description of the car and plate number.

Police caught up with the car near Shaw's Plaza. After talking with the operator of the Taurus, police determined that he had just been distracted while on his cell phone. He was given a verbal warning about impeded operation due a cell phone. It is not illegal to talk on a cell phone while driving unless it impedes operation, police said.

Revoked registration

Parking a vehicle with revoked registration on a public way is not allowed, police said.

A 48-year-old Scituate man is being summonsed to court because he had parked his pickup truck on Summer Street, which is a public way, police said. A computer check run by the officer revealed the plates to the 1996 red Ford pickup had been revoked because the vehicle was not insured. The incident occurred at about 5:30 p.m. on Tuesday (April 17).

The officer contacted the owner who was also the operator and who reported that the matter was an misunderstanding with the registry. However police are summonsing the man to Quincy District Court for allowing a vehicle with revoked registration and without insurance on a public way. Police have seized the plates until the individual can get things squared away with the registry.

Mini-bike

Police are still holding an unregistered mini-bike that was confiscated from a teenager who was racing it along Highland Avenue last Friday (April 20). A mini-bike is also called a pocket bike and has a small motor.

The officer responded to the scene and observed the activity and saw that the 17-year-old did not have a helmet. The bike also had no registration sticker as required. The officer took the bike; the teen is required to pay a $35 fine for having an unregistered mini-bike and a $25 fine for wearing no helmet. He has 21 days to pay the fines or appeal them to court.

Unruly son

A Cohasset parent called police after his son, who had been arrested in Scituate, became unruly, police said. The call came in about 6:45 p.m., Thursday (April 19). The father of the boy wanted to see an officer, who went to the home and that was enough to calm things down, police said. The father was advised if there were further problems to call the police again.

Unwanted calls

Two residents reported either prank or threatening phone calls last week. Verizon security has procedures through which customers can trap the telephone numbers of annoying callers by triggering an audit. Police can then work with Verizon to determine where the calls came from and summons the perpetrator(s) to court, police said.

Hang-up 9-1-1 calls

If you dial 9-1-1 by mistake, you can still expect a visit from a police officer. Often "hang-up" and "accidental" 9-1-1 calls appear in the weekly police log. Chief James Hussey said police have a standing practice to respond to all 9-1-1 calls. He explained that if the call is a "hang-up" they may heighten their response because it could represent a potential domestic situation. However, police also respond to "accidental" 9-1-1 calls when the caller claims to have misdialed intending to reach information at "4-1-1."

"The dispatcher will try to call right back," Hussey said about hang-ups and accidental calls. "But even if the caller says everything is OK, we respond and want to see that for ourselves.

"We need to be satisfied that the call was an accident, go in and talk to the people, and see that everything is fine," he said.

Slanetz commentary ruffles feathers

Resident requests apology

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

Sparks flew in the early part of the School Committee meeting on Wednesday night as a commentary that member Alfred Slanetz wrote in the April 13 Mariner was discussed. A member from the audience requested an apology from Slanetz for his comments directed specifically towards two residents.

Following the election on April 7, Slanetz submitted an opinion piece to the Mariner. ("Democratic process undermined" appeared on the op-ed page April 13). The commentary contained his views on the turmoil surrounding the recent School Committee election, the write-in candidates and the campaigns.

"My commentary for the Mariner was written as a private citizen," Slanetz said to clear the air, "It was a not a committee article — it was my observations on the election."

A few minutes later, Chairman Rick Flynn addressed the commentary as well by proposing an informal agreement among members of the School Committee. He requested that any type of letter or commentary that's going to be put in a public arena that may "smell like it came from the School Committee" be run by other members of the committee for proofreading and input.

He said that Slanetz's commentary in the Mariner was not the first time in his tenure on the School Committee that there has been some confusion between one member's views versus a collective committee's view following publication.

> "It was a not a committee article — it was my observations on the election."
> — Alfred Slanetz, School Committee

"We've worked incredibly hard to move forward over the last year," Flynn said. Flynn's proposal generated no discussion among committee members.

When Flynn opened up the floor to comments from the audience, Joe Stanganelli of 96 Aaron River Road, expressed his views on Slanetz's commentary as well. He requested that Slanetz apologize to Terry and Dorothy Green, who were described in his commentary as residents who sent out an e-mail in which write-in candidate Lee Jenkins and balloted candidate Peter Richardsson were described as "anti-school."

Stanganelli seemed to take most offense to Slanetz's description of the Greens' actions as "a shameful lack of integrity, ethics, character and sense of fair play." He said fact and assumptions used in Slanetz's opinion piece were completely false. He indicated that the apology should come in just as public a way as his original commentary.

Stanganelli's feelings had been addressed previously with Slanetz personally in a phone call on the day following the publication. When Stanganelli did not receive the desired response from Slanetz, he e-mailed the committee members as a body to make them aware of his appeal and desire to speak at the meeting.

"Respectfully, before you as a committee can expect to go on in a positive way, an apology is needed," Stanganelli said. Then, in "an effort of full disclosure," told the committee that Greens were close friends of his. Flynn attempted to move the meeting along by asking Stanganelli, who was clearly upset, to end his remarks so the committee could continue its business.

But before the School Committee could address their next item of business, another member of the audience requested to respond to Stanganelli's comments.

Kevin Odonnell of 248 King St. said that this was "free speech issue" and if someone takes exception to what is said then they have as much right as another to write a letter to the newspaper.

Stanganelli said it was not his desire to get into a letter writing contest in the public eye; he simply wanted an apology.

After an attempt by Flynn to close the subject, Odonnell gave Stanganelli his phone number and asked him to give him a call.

"This School Committee, as a body, had nothing to do with the election or letters," Flynn said as he tried to bring the meeting back to order, "people have to solve issues on their own."

Village Consultant to be hired

> The consultant will devise a "build-out plan" that will determine, among other things, the role of apartments in the village.

Town Manager Bill Griffin reported that the town has received two responses to the village planning request for proposals. Griffin has requested that a representative from the Planning Board, Community Preservation Committee and Economic Development Committee review the proposals, meet with the firms and offer him a recommendation. Both firms will be interviewed in the coming week by and a contract will be awarded shortly after.

The consultant will devise a "build-out plan" that will determine, among other things, the role of apartments in the village. Two zoning articles passed at the recent Annual Town Meeting to set the stage for future planning — the village business district was established and a bylaw reinstituting a special permit requirement for apartments.

At the fall Town Meeting, voters allocated a total of $30,000 to hire a consultant to draft a Village master plan, $15,000 was provided by the Town's general fund to look at zoning, retail analysis, parking while the CPC chipped in the balance of $15,000 to look at affordable housing, open space, and historical issues in the village.

Rick Flynn is new school board chairman

The first order of business on the School Committee's agenda was to nominate and appoint a new chairman, vice chairman and secretary. The reorganization was formally opened for nominations under the instructions of school business manager Dave DeGennaro.

Alfred Slanetz nominated Rick Flynn for Chairman, Adrienne MacCarthy seconded the motion and he was unanimously appointed Chairman. This will be Flynn's third time serving as Chairman during his tenure on the School Committee.

Next, Adrienne MacCarthy nominated Steve Fusco for Vice Chairman; the motion was seconded by Lucia Flibotte and approved by the committee 5-0.

Lastly, re-elected member Adrienne MacCarthy was nominated to the position of secretary.

Sub-committee appointments will be discussed at the next School Committee meeting.

Affordable housing in the pipeline

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

The search for affordable housing opportunities is ongoing. Members of the Housing Partnership Committee appeared at the Board of Selectmen meeting on Monday night to show that they have not lost sight of their charge. The Housing Partnership has been exploring options in town since the group was re-instated in early 2006.

Selectmen gave the committee the go ahead to take the next step to secure an existing house on Jerusalem Road.

"40B is still a problem out there," said Housing Partnership Chairman Tom Callahan stating that there are currently only 76 affordable units in town, roughly 3 percent. The town would need more than 300 units to not be susceptible to 40B projects. 40B is the state affordable housing law which sets threshold of towns having 10 percent of their housing stock deemed affordable.

Under 40B, a developer can apply directly to the ZBA for a comprehensive permit and doesn't have to obtain permits from other boards. Cohasset is vulnerable to 40B projects that often include a higher density than zoning bylaws allow because there is so little affordable housing in town.

Callahan described the Housing Partnership Committee philosophy as finding existing homes to do smaller projects that would be spread about the town. He asked Selectmen for feedback on the Housing Partnership in the coming months.

Selectman Ralph Dormitzer described the group's philosophy as "opportunistic," which he felt was okay, but he was concerned that there was a "lack of criteria" in choosing projects.

"It doesn't feel like a plan," he said. He urged Callahan to look at the broader question and determine where the best geographical location for affordable housing is.

"I don't know if a single large project is the way the town needs to go," said Callahan, who, like many residents, is fearful of an Avalon-type project and what it would do to change the character of Cohasset. (Avalon, a 40-B project, plans to build a 200-unit apartment complex off Route 3A).

Callahan requested that the Selectmen give their stamp of approval on sending a letter to the Department of Housing and Community Development (DHCD) to determine if the proposed two or three affordable units in the house at 821 Jerusalem Road could qualify under the Town's inventory of affordable housing.

"It is opportunistic but it's an ideal situation," said Callahan, "there are no immediate neighbors impacted."

The piece of property at 821 Jerusalem Road is currently owned by the Town and could be scheduled for auction. The town foreclosed on the property in May 2005 due to non-payment of property taxes. The two-family house is on a 0.135 acre parcel of land. It is bordered by a single-family condo, a Greek Orthodox Church and Straits Pond. The building is currently occupied by one tenant who is paying rent to the town, and the other unit if vacant.

"It is opportunistic but it's an ideal situation, there are no immediate neighbors impacted."
— Tom Callahan, Housing Partnership

Callahan requested the Selectmen to hold off on putting the house out to auction to allow the Partnership to pursue the affordable housing angle.

The Partnership's tentative and primary plan, assuming approval from the DHCD, is to have a request for proposal (RFP) go out to prospective developers. The RFP will contain preferences, guidelines and requirements for the developer. Preferences would include maximizing the property to three units and include a "family unit" or a two-bedroom apartment. Callahan said that family units are looked on favorably by the DHCD and may help in getting all units to qualify under the state affordable housing requirements.

If the DHCD does not give the project approval, the Partnership said the town could then put the house out to auction, or do whatever it sees fit.

Callahan indicated this is an ideal opportunity because the acquisition cost is low, a developer would take ownership of the land and incur the major costs of (possibly) adding a third unit and future maintenance costs. The plan also leaves the home on the tax rolls so the town would continue to benefit from the property taxes.

"Two maybe three units will not change the world" but it is a step in the right direction, Callahan said.

Town Manager Bill Griffin mentioned that the daughter of the previous owner of the house has contacted the town to convey her interest in regaining the property. The former owners had the right within one year of foreclosure to petition the Board of Selectmen or Land Court to vacate the final judgment. No petition was received in a year's time. He reminded the Selectmen that their decision on pursuing the Housing Partnership's proposal is foreclosing the option for the daughter of the previous owner.

Dormitzer expressed to the Housing Partnership the need for public process to be at the forefront of this project.

Callahan said that when the Partnerhip knows more details and the project is firmer, there would be a public hearing. He did not foresee public opposition because there would be little change to the house — it is currently a two-family house and it is going to stay a two-family house.

The Board of Selectmen voted 4-0 to endorse the Housing Partnership's request to send a letter to DHCD requesting the units at 821 Jerusalem Road to count toward Cohasset's affordable housing stock.

The Cohasset Housing Partnership meets the third Thursday of every month.

Kovach named Rookie of the Week for third time

AROUND TOWN

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

SUMMER'S COMING

Hey Cohasset. How was vacation for everyone? If you had a great experience, a story or photos to share or just want to let us know how your week was, send it all in. It sure goes fast but summer will be here soon!

BIRTHDAY WISHES

I heard from several little birdies here in town that on the same day we were celebrating my daughter Callie's 13th birthday, this past Monday, April 23, another person here in town who we all know was also celebrating birthday number 50! Fire Chief Robert Silvia turned 50 years old on April 23rd and so many family and friends want to make sure he knows how special he is and that everyone was thinking of him on that special day. You are a fantastic guy and everyone wishes you a very special year. Happy Birthday Chief!

TOP ROOKIE

UMass-Boston men's lacrosse player Peter Kovach of Cohasset has been named Little East Conference Rookie of the Week for the week of April 16 to 22, as was announced by the conference. This marks the third time this season and the second straight week that Peter has earned the award.

The sophomore tallied five points on two goals and three assists in two contests, while scooping up three ground balls. The attack man owned a .500 shooting percentage and also netted a man-down goal during the week. Peter registered an assist April 19 at the Wentworth Institute of Technology and added a ground ball. The Cohasset High School product led the Beacons April 21 with four points on two goals, including one in a man-down situation and a pair of assists at Western Connecticut State University and also added two ground balls.

Peter has seen action in all 10 games for UMass Boston, while starting every match. He has been the team's top playmaker with 19 assists for an average of 1.9 per game, which ranks fifth in the Little East Conference. He is also among the league's top point-scorers with 32 points to place sixth in the LEC and second on the team with 3.2 points per game mark.

His total of 13 goals is the third-highest figure on the squad. The sophomore also ranks fourth for the Beacons with 28 ground balls and leads the team, among players with 10 or more shots, with a .433 shooting percentage.

UMass Boston is currently 5-5 on the season, including a 3-2 mark in LEC play, which is good for third in the conference standings. UMB will see action again Tuesday, April 24 when it hosts Salve Regina University at the Clark Athletic Center field at 3 p.m.

SPEAKER AT CHS

Calling all parents of Senior High Schoolers! Jeff Wolfsberg, an internationally known speaker on adolescent issues will present "College-Bound: Successful Transition from High School to College." The hour presentation to parents will be held Friday, May 4th at 11:30am in the Cohasset High School Auditorium. The Social Service League of Cohasset proudly sponsors this free program.

CLEAN-UP

This coming Sunday, April 29th from 1-4, the Girl Scouts in town along with the Board of Health are sponsoring a town-wide cleanup. If you would like to join in, gather the family and friends and meet in the town hall parking lot where you will be given a location to go to. If you have any questions or would like to help, call the Board of Health office at Cohasset Town Hall.

MARATHON EFFORT

Wow, we had some amazing runners from here in town who ran the Boston Marathon for a wonderful cause. Mel Barret wanted to make sure to thank Judy Stavis, Cindy Swartwood and John Montgomery who all ran the Boston Marathon and raised funds for NF. Not only did they brave horrible weather conditions and post amazing times (3:38, 4:22 and 3:44 respectively), but they raised more than $20,000 for NF!

Much of the money raised was contributed by members of our great community here in Cohasset, and Mel, son, Gaeby, and family to send a great big thank you to Judy, Cindy and John, as well as to all of those who were kind enough to support them and us with their generosity. Great job to all and to Gaeb, here's to a wonderful year to come.

Neurofibromatosis (NF) is a genetic disorder of the nervous system that causes tumors to form on the nerves anywhere in the body at any time. This progressive disorder affects all races, all ethnic groups and both sexes equally. NF is one of the most common genetic disorders in the United States (one in every 3,000 to 4,000 births).

DEAN'S LIST

Caitlin Sanchez was named to the dean's list for the fall semester (2006-2007) and her mom and dad are so proud. Caitlin is a freshman at UMass Dartmouth and is a graphic design major. Caitlin graduated from CHS in 2006. This was great news to hear Caitlin, keep up the great work.

JIMMY FUND WALK

Our hats go off to Cohasset's Jane Henderson, who was among the more than 1900 people recognized for their extraordinary results in collecting pledges for the 2006 Boston Marathon Jimmy Fund Walk at the Extra Mile Reception for Pacesetters. Membership in the Pacesetter Club is reserved for those walkers who generated $750 or more in pledges. Members of the Pacesetter Club represent only 27 percent of total walkers in the event, yet their collective work generated more than 67 percent of the event's total of more than 5.5 million raised for cancer research and care at Dana-Farber Cancer Institute.

Jane, who has registered for the 2007 Walk, is on the team "Rosie's Walk." Last year she raised more than $5,000. If you would like to make a donation toward Jane's effort, visit: www.jimmyfundwalk.org, click on "support a walker" and enter Jane's name.

Hope to see you!

In addition to Elizabeth, the "True Value" painters including Ann Johnson, Marguerite Moore and Joanne Papandrea, all of Scituate, have painted together for several years. They have all studied with nationally known painter Charles Sovek of Chatham and gleaned their name from one of his teaching methods. During the summer on Wednesday nights, these ladies can be seen capturing the afternoon light at Scituate Lighthouse. All are very active when not painting and they enjoy kayaking and biking. Visualize a metric ton of CO2 Saturday

Marie Caristi-MacDonald
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Is your head in a cloud of CO2 or in a cube? If you would like to visualize the volume of a metric ton of CO2, join Sustainable Cohasset and other volunteers at Cohasset's Earth Day event this Sunday, April 29. David Ames, a science teacher at Cohasset High School and his class have constructed a 27-foot by 27-foot by 27-foot cube to illustrate the volume of a ton of CO2. You and your whole family can step inside the cube for a unique family photo opportunity.

CO2 is that mischievous heat trapping gas that is considered the biggest culprit in our global warming predicament. Using EPA statistics, every Mr.Ames' class calculated that the average American generates almost six billion metric tons of carbon annually or viewed from another perspective, every two other days each American is generating one metric ton of CO2.

In America, we would need 19 acres of land per person to sequester all the carbon dioxide we are generating from the burning of fossil fuels, primarily the oil, coal and gas being generated by power plants, automobiles and industrial facilities.

Other nations have assumed aggressive tactics, including EnglandEngland, which recently introduced a carbon tax levied on each individual in a household.

All of our politicians' heads are swimming in clouds of CO2 as they devise strategies and political platforms that would reduce CO2 emissions. California has banned the incandescent light bulb and Connecticut is also considering adopting the same law. Despite the current political gridlock on reductions, most people agree that emissions need to be reduced by 80 percent by 2050.

Other nations have assumed aggressive tactics, including EnglandEngland, which recently introduced a carbon tax levied on each individual in a household. In Japan, where the Kyoto protocol originated, theypeople bring their own chopsticks to food events to reduce emissions.

The enormity of the problem is real no matter where we live and can be viewed on beautiful Cohasset Common this Sunday.

The CO2 Cube Project seeks sponsors. David Bigley of All The Best, a natural and organic health food storeYour Neighborhood Natural Foods Store, located at Pleasant St., Cohasset has been our first generous corporate donor, purchasing a full leg, which is 27 feet, of the cube for $270. Individual donors can purchase a linear foot for $10. Checks can be made payable to Sustainable Cohasset, c/o of Kathryn Earle, 36 Ash St., Cohasset, MA. 02025.

There is still more than 2973000 linear feet available. The cube was built to generate awareness and to educate the public about the problem of global warming. Sustainable Cohasset plans to reimburse

Mr. Ames and his class for the cost of the cube and any residual monies will be used to support global warming educational programs.

Requests from other environmental groups to use the CO2 cubeUBEUBECUBE at public rallies have already begun, so we should applaud and thank Mr. Ames and his Cohasset students for the awareness they have generated in just a brief time span. It deserves everyone's support.

In addition, adult volunteers are needed to help construct the cube from 10:45 a.m., to noon and to deconstruct the cube at 2:30 p.m.

Eagle Scout builds concession stand their approval and he moved ahead to obtaining building permits for the structure. The concession stand is located right outside the entrance gate to the football stadium.

Keniley designed the stand by himself, with professional advice from Cohasset architect Jim Shipsky. A professional framing crew came to help him get the structure properly situated and he had lots of help from his Boy Scout Troop 28, his parents and other residents.

"I definitely couldn't have done it without them," he said.

The concession stand was first used during the high school lacrosse season last spring.

The structure is fully wired with electricity increasing the opportunity for groups to have different types of concessions to be sold. Keniley is proud that the structure is completely up to code.

Some of the unique features of the building are two windows in the rear of the structure that look out onto the football field, so workers will never miss a part of the action. There are two cutouts in the front of the building so customers can place their orders with workers inside. Those windows are protected by pieces of wood on hinges. Keniley installed a pulley system on each window so they can easily be lifted. Each window is protected with a lock.

He spent more than 100 hours completing the project. To complete the project he and his troop did fundraising, got donations (like the back windows), and some of the expense was out of his pocket, he said. The concession stand was first used during the high school lacrosse season last spring.

Keniley's project is one that will continue to give back to the Cohasset community. He has created a safe, comfortable and operational space for volunteers to raise funds for the schools in the years to come.

Keniley, who moved to Cohasset from Philadelphia in eighth grade, started getting involved with Boy Scouts when he was 11 years old.

"I love the outdoors," which is the main reason he has stuck with Boy Scouts, he says.

Keniley graduated from Cohasset High School in 2006. He took this year off from school but is looking forward to attending UMASS Amherst in the fall. He plans to major in communications. Not one to rest on his laurels, Keniley is currently running his own painting crew this spring and summer.

Cohasset MS LifeLines walk set for April 28

Hundreds of Cohasset and South Shore residents are rallying at the South Shore Community Center on Saturday, April 28 for the MS LifeLines MS Walk to create a world free of multiple sclerosis. A spring tradition for nearly 20 years, walkers follow a 5-mile path starting at 10 a.m. from the center. Check in starts at 8:30 a.m. Each walker is encouraged to raise a minimum of $100, but most collect more than $200. Organized by the National Multiple Sclerosis Society, Central New England Chapter, more than 200,000 walkers participate nationwide in the MS Walk each year at more than 700 sites, and raise more than $30 million. Family and corporate walk teams and volunteers can register online at msnewengland.org, or by calling 800-493-WALK (9255), and in person the day of the event.

Last year, 7,000 walkers registered for the walk, and the event raised $1.9 million. Eighty-seven percent of money raised by the chapter provides help for today, and hope for tomorrow to 14,000 individuals and families affected by MS in Massachusetts and New Hampshire through MS education, support, advocacy and research. Of the many corporate sponsors that make the MS Walk possible each year, the most loyal and generous are MS LifeLines, Pro Con Inc., WCVB-TV5, Community Newspaper Company and Perfect Entertainment DJs.

Studies show that early and ongoing treatment with an FDA-approved therapy can reduce future disease activity and improve quality of life for many people with multiple sclerosis. Talk to a health care professional and contact the National MS Society at www.nationalmssociety.org or call 800-344-4867 to learn about ways to help manage multiple sclerosis and about current research that may one day reveal a cure.

Beechwood Ballpark hits green home run

By Karen Quigley
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

The redesign of the Beechwood Ballpark just took a quantum leap forward in becoming the showcase of Cohasset's playing fields. In addition to its newly engineered field, the Beechwood Ballpark is the first of Cohasset's athletic fields to have an organic turf design and management program.

When approached last fall by the Water Resource Protection Committee, the Beechwood Ballpark Committee enthusiastically embraced the concept of organic turf management. "We realize the importance of having our playing fields be a healthy environment for our young athletes and for the public." said Merle Brown.

In January, Merle and Glenn Pratt, co-chairs of the Beechwood Ballpark Committee, Andy Swanson of the DPW and Jim Kinch, chair of the Water Resource Protection Committee met with BSC Engineers, the ballpark engineers, and Chip Osborne, a nationally recognized expert in organic turf management.

"We saw this as an opportunity to demonstrate that organic turf management does provide an aesthetically pleasing playing field that holds up under repeated use, and is financially feasible for the town," Kinch said.

At the conclusion of the meeting, everyone was on-board. Swanson, who is in charge of the DPW's fertilizer and pesticide program commented, "This not only provides a safer environment for the kids, but also for the workers at the DPW."

Due to time limitations, building an all-natural turf field isn't possible, therefore a commercial sod, Sportsgrass, will be used to provide a base for the playing surfaces. This ensures the field will be available for use in the summer of 2007.

Maintenance costs, while initially higher for organic turf, decrease as soil thickens and deepens; in three years natural organic methods become cheaper annually than conventional chemical treatment. Irrigation costs decrease as well as the lawn root structure retains moisture longer to resist drought conditions.

Since the Beechwood Ballpark is in the watershed, the Water Commission offered to underwrite the initial additional cost of organic sod and the five-year maintenance program.

"Protecting the quality of our drinking water is always our highest priority," said Pratt, who is also a water commissioner. "This ties in nicely with our existing plans to build Rain Gardens to reduce the nutrient loading in the watershed."

Organic turf management is endorsed by Town Hall. "I believe it very important that town government itself embrace organic turf management practices to set an example for everyone in town." said Town Manager, Bill Griffin. "Beechwood Ballpark is a perfect opportunity to do just that."

Peggy Chapman, chair of the Board of Health said, "For years, Steve Bobo has been our public voice through his articles in The Mariner about healthy lawn practices and ways to reduce exposure to pesticides. We are very excited to learn the new ball field at Beechwood will be organically managed. This is especially important due to its proximity to the watershed for our drinking water. We hope that all public and private lawns in our town will eventually adopt such practices."

That day is one field closer to reality.

Cohasset celebrates Earth Day on Sunday

FROM EARTH DAY, PAGE 1

organizations. Sustainable Cohasset purpose is to educate and inspire others to make incremental or large lifestyle changes.

"Whatever people are willing to do, we're going to be affirming," said Chairman of Sustainable Cohasset, Kathryn Earle. She said they encourage a "smorgasbord of options" for residents to become greener, from recycling, to changing to compact fluorescent lights or buying a hybrid car.

Earle says there is opportunity for all types of viewpoints in the group and multiple ways to get involved depending on interest. There are six working groups tackling different tasks throughout the town from working the schools and town boards to showing movies at the library with discussions.

"The environment needs to be a unifying issue and that speaks to the way the problem will be solved," Earle says every person needs to change in some way to alleviate the problem.

The CO2 Cube project is a part of the Sustainable Cohasset community and school outreach. High School physical science teacher David Ames, who got the idea from a Sustainable Cohasset meeting, has led a group of environmentally conscious students to construct a 27-square-foot cube.

The meaning behind the monstrous construction is to show people just how much carbon dioxide they are responsible for putting into the atmosphere. This cube represents the amount of carbon dioxide one American emits into the atmosphere every two days. On average Americans are responsible for emitting 196 "cubes" or tons of carbon dioxide every year. The cube has been constructed in an ecologically friendly manner — all material, including the "sonotubes," which is the primary material used, is recyclable.

To represent the one to two ratio of carbon atoms and oxygen atoms in one molecule of carbon dioxide, the cube has been painted black and red — the colors typically associated with those elements in chemistry diagrams. The four vertical pieces of the cube have been painted black (carbon), while the eight horizontals red (oxygen).

The CO2 Cube is finally ready for its unveiling. Weather permitting, the cube is poised to make a (literally) big statement on Sunday.

"No one knows what a ton of CO2 looks like, and I thought that if people could see it then it might help visualize the issue," said Ames. The "CO2 Cube Crew," as they have aptly named themselves, will begin to assemble the cube on Sunday beginning at 11a.m.

"Assembly is very fun and interesting to watch, so I encourage interested parties to come early," says Ames.

The group is also looking for sponsors to help defray the cost of materials for the cube. A $10 donation to "Sustainable Cohasset" will sponsor a foot of sonotubing. There are 324 linear feet of sonotube.

The Earth Day clean-up effort will commence at 12:30p.m on Sunday. The event was organized by a joint effort of Girl Scout Troop 4784, ninth-grade cadettes and the Board of Health. Other Girl Scouts troops will be participating and residents are encouraged to join. The staging area will be in the Town Hall parking lot, assignments will be given and supplies handed out between 12:30p.m. and 1:30p.m. Organizers expect the clean up to run until about 4p.m.

The plan is to target highly trafficked areas of town that are prone to litter. The following areas have been marked for clean-up, if there are ample volunteers: near the schools, Government Island, Black Rock beach, the dune side of Sandy Beach, the ball fields along N. Main Street, Elms Meadow near Cushing Road and James Lane and the Jerusalem Road/Bow Street.

If you would like more information on sponsoring the cube, e-mail David Ames, dames@cohassetk12. org. Sustainable Cohasset meets monthly on the fourth Tuesday of every month at 7p.m. at the High School library. For more information e-mail welcome@sustainablecohasset.org.

Our own backyard

Eliminating the use of plastic bags is one way that we can make a difference right away.

As JoAnn Mirise says in her column "Towards a Sustainable Cohasset" this week (see page 14) — plastic bags are a big source of pollution and they do not "biodegrade."

In fact, we lost confidence in claims of "biodegradability" years ago when we watched a documentary on the subject. Those featured in the documentary pulled out from landfills virtually pristine "biodegradable" newspapers and cardboard that had not biodegraded at all after 30-plus years!

We will admit to being a supermarket customer who asks for "paper and plastic." JoAnn has now motivated us to change our ways and start bringing along canvas shopping bags.

It seems like a small step but if we all do it – what a difference it could make!

Cutting back on the use of plastic bags would also help stop visual pollution. When you look around the South Shore, it is easy to conclude that we have lost our civic pride. Litter is everywhere! And plastic bags are a big contributor.

Many motorists are apparently tossing plastic bags and other items out of their cars and the rest of us are allowing the litter to remain there, hoping that someone else will collect it.

In our neighborhood, a large "to-go" plastic dinner container (one with a black divided base and a clear plastic top) has been in the same spot for three weeks. We have walked by it nearly every day and wonder why no one else has picked it up.

Further along our walk by a wooded area, the shoulder of the road is littered with myriad items including squashed Coke and Pepsi cans and bottles, beer cans, plastic cups and cardboard containers as well as plastic bags.

It is time for a "shipshape" day in every neighborhood in every South Shore town.

The good news is as Cohasset gears up for Earth Day and the unveiling of the Cube on the Town Common – we are sensing a groundswell out there that includes people of all ages. Steps are being taken to change behavior and increase awareness.

We can no longer wait for "someone else" to take care of the environment in our own backyard. We also have to start putting pressure on those who abuse it.

Years ago, smoking was accepted and even considered "sexy" judging from old movies. Now – thanks to awareness about the health effects of smoking and pressure from the public — smokers are not welcome to engage in their habit in public places. Smoking is no longer "cool."

By working together, as will be the case in Cohasset this weekend with the town-wide Earth Day cleanup, the tide could change. In our homes we need to talk more about pollution, littering, and how to save energy. It could be as simple as combining a few car trips and taking canvas bags to the grocery store.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Flibotte thanks supporters

TO THE EDITOR:

To the voters of Cohasset:

It sounds like I missed a very exciting election. As an 18-year resident of Cohasset, I cannot recall a more action packed 24-hour period leading up to election day — I am sorry I missed it (not really — Italy is beautiful in the Spring). Although I am an ocean away, I am deeply moved by the support and confidence the town's voters have placed in me. I also want to extend my gratitude to all the people who jumped into action on such short notice and were so effective in getting out the voters. I know there are many of you who should be singled out but I fear if I start naming names, I may omit someone, so please accept my sincerest thanks to all of you. I think your efforts and the election results speak volumes about the level of concern many of us have about the schools. I hope the energy, dedication, and support demonstrated by the organizers and reinforced by the election results on Election Day will be maintained over the next three years.

I can only promise that I will work tirelessly on behalf of our schools over the next three years. As a town, we are fortunate to have a dedicated Superintendent and a great administration in place. I look forward to working with Dr. Walsh and her administration to move our schools forward. I believe this can only be accomplished by working within the schools and with other boards throughout the town. As a community, we should all strive to make the Cohasset Public School System one of the best in state. A strong school system benefits everyone.

To the residents and business owners of Cohasset:

Recently, the Cohasset Police Association conducted a fundraiser via bulk mailing. Due to your overwhelming generosity, we will be able to support numerous local causes and sponsorships this year. Already we have been able to donate to such worthwhile endeavors as the Deer Hill Band, Special Olympics, Toys for Tots, American Cancer Society and the Sons of the American Legion Flag Memorial.

On behalf of the men and women of the Association, we thank you for your continued support, and encourage you to look for future events sponsored by us.

Calling for an end to 'robocalls'

COMMENTARY

TOM CALLAHAN

Our schools are equally at risk whether the School Committee is filled with anti-tax, anti-school negativists or with yes-men.

I hope people were able to read an article in the April 25 NY Times discussing nationwide moves to ban automatic "robocalls" during election campaigns, and the following quote of the day in the on-line version. Quote: "Get rid of them. When they first started, this wasn't much of a nuisance. But it's epidemic-level now." Stan Jordan, state rep. from Jacksonville, Fla.

Shrill cries of "freedom of speech" aside, I would certainly support a ban on robocalls thru bylaw, if necessary, but it would be nice if everyone could just agree to scale it back voluntarily.

Yes, the write-ins had the absolute right to run as they did, but having the right does not necessarily make it right. In particular, the stealth nature of it by both "sides" certainly did not pass the smell test. Of course, the Mariner unfortunately failed to mention that it announced one candidate's campaign only in the on-line version of the paper the day before the election, and that both sides, as was rumored, used robocalls in this election (even if only one side did, however, as I am now told, the existence of the rumor says something itself, and certainly robocalls have been used in the past by various candidates).

Indeed, correct me if I am wrong, but I believe the recent trend in using these in local elections, and in grossly escalating the cost of contested campaigns for office in Cohasset, started a few years ago with what I guess we'll call the "anti-school" camp.

Whether used by both sides or not, also not right was the tone of the one side's call that I did receive, becoming too common in school-related elections and discussions. Both sides should be ashamed of themselves in their self-serving perpetuation of divisions in this town, and their persistent name-calling and scare-tactic approaches. Right out of the Bush-Cheney-Rove playbook.

Our schools are equally at risk whether the School Committee is filled with anti-tax, anti-school negativists or with yes-men. Of course, efforts to actually improve the quality of our high school, a dire need in my view, get drowned out in the adversity, and so nothing is either "saved" or "reformed".

The prospect for any leadership on that issue remains dim in such a climate, no matter which of the two write-ins got elected. So much for the TogetherCohasset (What's Possible?) forums begun last spring of which I was an eager part. I had feared then that the participation of some was mere hypocritical lip service, and I may have been proven right. Ever the optimist, however, I will make one last call to revive TogetherCohasset if anyone believes the name has any meaning anymore.

Sidewalks to have 'safety escapes'

MAKING TRACKS

TOM GRUBER & MARK BRENNAN

Construction continues on the Harbor Wall. Note the trench box being used as protection to prevent the dirt from caving into the work area.

Granite curbing near the Spring/Pond streets grade crossing.

What a difference a week makes. The weather has gone from abysmal to super. Workers have come out of the woodwork and are everywhere, the Greenbush, the harbor sea wall and other projects. Busy, busy, busy…

Forest Avenue Paving and Sidewalks – First, a bit about Forest Avenue... Several weeks ago, we reported on a meeting that the Board of Selectmen held to review the plans for Forest Avenue. The area residents overwhelmingly requested that the project move forward as quickly as feasible with the present design. They indicated that this project had been only a gleam in the Town's eye too long. It is time to bring it to fruition. However, some residents expressed concern about the safety aspects of bicyclists using the street where hard curbs had been installed. The issue is that Forest Avenue is rather narrow and by placing hard granite curb at the edge of the road it is very difficult for bikes to "escape" to safe haven off of the roadway.

However, not all of the roadway will be edged by hard granite curb. Some portions will be edged by Cape Cod berms. (Cape Cod berms are shallow sloping curbs of asphalt.) Bike escape is easier with Cape Cod berms since they can ride over them safely.

We feel that the residents made a very important safety point. We do really listen to resident comments and concerns and try to incorporate them into the design whenever possible. As a result of this input, we approached the Norfolk County Engineer with this problem. Bingo, within two days they had a solution! The engineers modified the drawings to create special "safety escapes" from the street.

For areas with granite curbing there will be safety escapes about every 200 feet. These bike escapes will be created by utilizing driveway aprons that are already a part of the job, or by adding new curb cuts and with a compacted stone dust pathway to the sidewalk. Where the curbing is a Cape Cod berm, only the compacted stone dust area will be created to access the sidewalk. As an additional safety feature, on the side of Forest Avenue opposite the sidewalk, whenever the adjacent land is reasonably level, we will create a "safe haven" area of compacted stone dust alongside the road.

By now your eyes are probably glazing over from all of this detail. In summary, we are able to create periodic ways for bikes to safely get off the road. We realize that this solution is not perfect, but it will create a substantially safer road for bicyclists.

These bike escapes will be created by utilizing driveway aprons that are already a part of the job, or by adding new curb cuts and with a compacted stone dust pathway to the sidewalk.

Greenbush goings on – Pond and Spring streets have seen the curbing installed this week around the new crossing. The new dividing islands on Pond Street are very visible now. The MBTA contractor tells us that paving will be done shortly, although we think it may still be a week or two.

Meanwhile, the paving has started on Sohier Street. For technical reasons, they will be paving it at two separate times. We are not very happy that the MBTA has installed sloped Cape Cod berm alongside the new sidewalk beside the library. We believe that where the sidewalks directly abut the street, vertical separation must be included for pedestrian safety. This is especially true when the sidewalk will be used as a main route to get to two of our schools and the library. We have asked the MBTA to make this change and are awaiting their answer.

The paving at Beechwood Street should be fixed shortly, hopefully by the end of this week. Part of the paving was removed and will be replaced at new grades to improve the drainage. After the paving was removed, until they get it replaced, the road is a bit bumpy. So, take care of your car and drive slowly in this area.

Work continues at the Cohasset Station. A major portion of the drainage has been placed underground. We do have some issues with a recent change that the MBTA has made in the drainage system and are awaiting for new information from them about their drainage system design. CBB has laid a new water line through the whole parking lot from 3A to North Main Street at the request of the Cohasset Water Department. This will enable the Cohasset Water Department to "loop" the water main and improve the pressure on North Main Street.

Harbor wall project — The harbor wall construction photo shows masons for the project laying the stonework for the new seawall. They are using a trench box (the two steel walls visible in the photo) as protection to prevent the dirt from caving into the area where they are working. With the great weather this week work is progressing at a good clip.

I'd like to do it again

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

Some things I did when I was young and ice covered most of the earth and I'd like to do them again now that the globe is warming.

Hitchhike down Quincy Avenue to Quincy on a Saturday afternoon to plunk down 10 cents for a balcony seat at the State Theater to watch a double feature along with Movietone News, a cartoon and Chapter 10 of a Buck Jones serial.

Catch a train for Boston at the Weymouth Landing station with Bob Knudsen and run across town to the Garden and pay 50 cents to sit in the balcony to watch Eddie Shore and the rest of the Bruins whip the hapless New York Americans.

Pick green beans for 10 cents an hour from 7 to 12 in the morning at Arnold's farm, where East Junior High School in Braintree stands today, and hoping Old Man Arnold would pick me to work the 1 to 6 o'clock afternoon shift so I could make a whole dollar for the day.

Spend a lazy summer Sunday afternoon at Humarock Beach in Scituate, looking forward to the inevitable stop for ice cream at the Dutchland Farms store on Route 3A...

Attend a Red Sox game in Fenway Park with the paper boys from Louis Vallas' newsstand in the Landing and catch a foul ball off the bat of Julius "Moose" Solters. Well, maybe not catch. The ball hit the façade of the upper deck and landed on the seat beside me.

Spend a lazy summer Sunday afternoon at Humarock Beach in Scituate, looking forward to the inevitable stop for ice cream at the Dutchland Farms store on Route 3A where P. J.'s Country House is today.

Have a drink out of coffee cups with Red Dennehy at 3 or 4 o'clock in the morning in Cohen's Diner after closing our Skeeball, Greyhound and Pokerino concessions in Paragon Park for the night.

Dive and swim from Red Pier, a rickety wharf with a house on the end that jutted out into the Fore River, where the Metropolitan Yacht Club sprawls today. For the daring among us, it was the starting point for swimming the river to Idlewell on the other side.

Drive by the local Hooverville, where the homeless and the jobless lived during the Depression on the current site of Boston College High School, and thank whoever that my father was gainfully employed, even though hamburger often was Sunday dinner in our house.

Watch my first television program, the heavyweight championship bout between Joe Louis and Jersey Joe Walcott, on the 10-inch screen at Fat Key's house on West Street in an upscale section of Braintree.

Skip school and travel to New York City with Gordon Stovall and Holly Black in Gordie's Blue Bomber to catch a Brooklyn Dodger's game at Ebbetts Field. I am told we hit 100 miles an hour on the Merritt Parkway in Connecticut but my eyes were closed and I was praying at the time.

Join Ruth Clark's seventh grade class at the Thomas A. Watson School in the auditorium to the heavily accented Walter Damrosch's "Music Appreciation Hour," the school's only recognition of the arts.

Cell phones do not make good bath toys

TALES FROM THE FAR SIDE OF PERFECT

DIANE K. DANIELSON

The other day, I caught myself explaining the difference between "waterproof" and "water-resistant" to my son. This conversation took place only seconds after I stopped him from climbing into the bath wearing nothing but my favorite watch and a smile. (But Mom, how else will I know how long I can hold my breath underwater?) Fortunately, I managed to remove my watch before splashdown. However, I'm sad to report that during a recent rainstorm, I proved that cell phones are neither waterproof nor water-resistant.

I can't even blame my son for this one. I'm the one who left my brand new cell phone in my gym bag on the side of the soccer field while my fellow weekend warriors and I continued to play in a complete downpour. As I frantically tried cell phone CPR after the game (i.e., randomly pressing buttons with varied amounts of pressure in an attempt to bring my waterlogged phone back to life), I panicked — what would I do now? Not knowing where else to turn, I went directly from the field, still wearing my soaking wet and mud-splattered uniform, to the Verizon Wireless store, which was already jam-packed with other distraught, cellularly-challenged customers.

Could it be that I've enjoyed my last couple of days without a constant barrage of phone interruptions?

Fortunately, I had insurance, and one call and $50 later, a new phone was on its way. The only bad news? It would take two whole days for the phone to actually arrive. The good news? The new phone would be quite a bit fancier than my old one. (The insurance company didn't have the equivalent so I was upgraded. Now why doesn't this happen with cars? "Sorry Ma'am, we no longer have '99 VW Passats, but would it be o.k. if we sent you a newer model?") So here I am with this fancy new phone with all these fabulous functions and no flipping idea how to use them. But it really doesn't matter right now, because the phone's not even activated. I just can't seem to get around to it.

Could it be that I've enjoyed my last couple of days without a constant barrage of phone interruptions? I can still check messages by using my land-line, but that's something I do at my convenience. And it's rather nice not having my phone ring just when I get to the front of the Starbucks' line or while I'm negotiating my way through traffic. And while it took me a few days, I'm no longer frantically searching my purse every time there's a ring in the vicinity. (Note to self: There will never be a need to check if it's a telephonic version of a bad disco song.) Of course, I was a bit unnerved the first couple of times I walked out of the house with just my wallet and keys. But, I can't remember when I've ever felt so light and free.

I know I need to activate the new phone soon. But once activated, then I'm actually going to have to read the manual and figure out how to use it. And then after that, I'd have to program in all those numbers that I couldn't live without. Maybe this time I'll put in last names, because I have no idea who at least half of the people were in my old phone. But, perhaps I shouldn't rush into things. After all, it's almost beach season, and I really wouldn't want to chance having my son try to make underwater phone calls. (Note to remind son: People — unlike cell phones — may be water-resistant, but neither people nor cell phones are waterproof.)

Low marks for last week's commentaries

COMMENTARY

LEE JENKINS

After reading the commentaries in last week's Mariner written by a lawyer and a doctor my first impression was that they were auditioning to be Rosie O'Donnell's sidekicks on "The View."

They definitely had their talking points in line insinuating that the Mariner articles and editorials about the election were specifically written to be either "supportive of vicious campaigns" or divisive and to sell papers. Gentlemen, I would advise you to discover the facts before you attempt to disparage someone.

Let me set the record straight – reporter Nancy White did not editorialize in her online article identifying me a "Longtime school proponent". This explanatory statement was a result of her interview. To end any confusion and be unambiguously illustrative, I propose from this day forward we should describe those like myself as being "advocates for the children" and use "buttresses for the administration" for those who disagree with open debate and profess blind faith in the administration Those terms definitely gives a clear (A) and (B) choice.

The advocates for the children were there but the buttresses for the administration were in low numbers and proved to be antagonistic and negative.

Mr. Waters' conclusion that the terms used by his side are "so vague and amorphous that it carries no meaning" is way off base. It is specifically meant to instill fear and intimidation in those who do not march as mind numbed robots in lock step with the administration. Discounting the retaliations against me and my family after being labeled "anti-school", what about what happened to Peter Richardsson?

Here is a newcomer to Cohasset, who immediately served on the Economic Development Committee in an attempt to help the town. He ran an open campaign appearing on Our Town, operating a website, writing press releases and answering questions in the Mariner, meeting people, actively volunteering and raising money at the PSO Telethon. Instead of being given a chance this man was vilified because he said the schools could possibly better allocate the resources they had. Huh?

I suppose that examining the budget and attempting to discover funds that could be best used in the classrooms is code to the buttresses for the administration that the person may actually not accept everything said as Gospel. That would pose a real problem. It might mean that the administration and school committee would have to become accountable and disclose facts and figures.

Last summer I had hopes for the Together Cohasset project and was disappointed in the lack of results. The advocates for the children were there but the buttresses for the administration were in low numbers and proved to be antagonistic and negative.

It's not as though we haven't tried over the years to create an informed populace and bring up the standards for our schools. What have we gotten for our efforts? A disregard for open dialogue and innovative ideas and a divided, distrustful community.

HEALTH NOTES

Cube helps paint picture of problem

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

...the cube represents the volume of one ton of carbon dioxide each American is responsible in some way for creating every two days to increase global warming.

It's a Town characteristic to arrive late at a party. True to form, Sunday is Cohasset's Earth Day and many of us will be driving our cars by the Common. There, at about noon, we will observe an interesting artifact. The product of Cohasset High School students in one of their science classes, the brainchild of David Ames, science teacher and 13 freshmen. An improbable construction, bound to be noticed, it's a 27-foot high cube made of a building material called Sonotube, a paper derivative material used to create foundations and columns in construction.

Sonotubes, are the perfect product to represent Earth Day, made of recycled paper products. Proposed by Jim Shipsky, Cohasset environmentalist architect, who helped with the design, they are a marvel of construction efficiency. The 12- foot-long round tubes selected for the cube are nested in threes to reduce shipping cost; one tube slightly larger, one slightly smaller and one spot on 8-in. diameter. When building the 27-foot posts for the cube, the smaller tubes would act as sleeves to strengthen several tube sections until they reached the 27-foot design length. David and the kids, the designers, then created special corner fittings made out of plywood to hold the assembly together and a system of erection pulleys to lift the horizontal upper tubes in place. A system of guys and supports was created to give the assembled cube rigidity and support. Final painting gave the cube its incredible Earth Day image. The students are scheduled to have the cube erected by 12:30 on the Common.

The cube design will be available for anyone to reproduce and plans are already afoot to have Earth Day CO2 cubes displayed at important events country wide. Contact DAmes@cohassetk12.org for information.

In a handout the kids prepared, you will learn that the cube represents the volume of one ton of carbon dioxide each American is responsible in some way for creating every two days to increase global warming. Tell yourself or anyone else that global warming doesn't exist! Tell those who call the Board of Health asking whether their cellar full of water has bacteria. It does! — a thousand times higher than safe for swimming or wading during cleanup. Tell those who've been driven out of their houses by the second "hundred year storm" in 10 months. Tell those who stoke the fires of the incinerators which burn our enormous piles of trash. Those cars we drive by the common, as well as the trash we throw away, are part of our contribution to creating the gas that the cube represents – the carbon dioxide which has changed our planet.

It's no longer a threat, it's here. According to the builders of the cube in their handout, we in America contribute a quarter of the carbon dioxide being created worldwide. If this is true; we are no longer part of the problem; we are the problem. We have eschewed some of the very practices which could have saved us from this inevitability, such as nuclear energy, public transportation, walking. At the end of the Vietnam-era, the comic-strip character, Pogo, spoke words as applicable now, as they were then, "We have met the enemy and he is us." And, since the forces that are changing our planet are already in place, they can be expected to increase at a rate that will rapidly make our planet a vastly different place to live. Within the lifetime of most of those reading this paper, the changes we will observe will eliminate more habitable land mass as it's already done in places like Louisiana, Florida, Chatham, Scituate, Marshfield and Plymouth. The changes will alter the way we will need to protect ourselves from disease, such as the use of more frequent and effective disinfectant practices. We'll need to make changes in how we handle emergencies which will be arriving ever more frequently. There will be more and stronger winds, storms, extremes of heat and periods of cold, higher tides. And can anyone really feel safe about not having a pandemic?

There's really no longer time. It would take a miracle to change our habits; can we do more than observe, prepare and try to cope? Perhaps the CO2 cube can be a part of that miracle. Come to the Common early; watch the cube being assembled and sign up for the Earth Day Cleanup at the Town Hall parking lot.

We have made the picture; now it's time to see what develops.

Let's stop using plastic bags

TOWARDS A SUSTAINABLE COHASSET

JoAnn Mirise

The answer is to stop using plastic bags and start using reusable bags for all of our shopping trips to the grocery, hardware store, clothing boutiques, and even the dry cleaners...

The first time I saw the ocean I was 16 years old. My husband, whose earliest memories are of sailing with his dad, finds this piece of my history to be utterly astounding.

I grew up in a family whose vacations mainly consisted of car trips to Detroit to visit my relatives. Not exactly the breathtaking adventures that I daydreamed about. It wasn't until I was in high school that my best friend invited me to join her family on their yearly excursion to Assateague Island near Ocean City, Maryland.

Not only was it a beach trip, but a camping trip as well. I had never slept in nature before. This was big. When we pulled into the parking lot of the beach I could hear the waves and smell the sweet, salty air. I approached the dunes slowly. My body tingled and it felt like my feet were barely touching the ground. My heart started beating faster, and my breath shortened as I crested the dunes. There it was, the most ridiculously beautiful thing I have ever seen. I held back my tears so as to not call attention to my naïveté. I was clearly changed forever. And I realized that what my parents lacked in adventure, they made up for in the empathy they instilled in me. For the response that I had upon my first meeting of the sea would be my foundation for a lifelong pursuit of protecting an environment that inspires such wonderment and awe.

A few days ago I was reading an article on how the city of San Francisco banned the use of plastic bags last month. I have known that plastic bags are a menace. They are made from petroleum-based polyethylene, derived from the same oil that has us in a war and threatens our independence. They do not biodegrade which means they never go away— they only break down into smaller and smaller pieces and make their way as particulate into our food and drinking supply. (Yum. What a delightful addition to my sesame-encrusted salmon.) And, they are killing hundreds of thousands of sea creatures a year. When wildlife eats, gets trapped or is muzzled by the bags they starve, suffocate and die from blocked intestines or airways.

But what I didn't know is that in the Pacific Ocean there is an area the approximate size of Texas that is a nearly solid mass — an island — of plastic bag debris. I tried to visualize this. It seemed so absurd that I started to doubt the facts of the article. I did my own research and found out that, sadly, this is all true. In fact there is an organization, the Algalita Marine Research Foundation, whose work has shown that this plastic island has 1,000,000 times more toxins than surrounding seawaters, and six times as much plastic per weight of water than zooplankton. And their most recent expedition uncovered that the acreage of this area is expanding rapidly.

If San Francisco, a population of 700,000 plus people can, from a grassroots movement, make the change to get rid of such a destructive hazard, surely Cohasset, a town of approximately 7,000 people can follow suit.

How do we accomplish this locally? The answer is to stop using plastic bags and start using reusable bags for all of our shopping trips to the grocery, hardware store, clothing boutiques, and even the dry cleaners (take garment bags that can be reused.) And, no, paper bags don't count as they have their own litany of unsustainable features.

The key to success is being unequivocally unwavering in your decision to make this change. This means holding strong and trying to stuff your handbag or pockets, or voiding the purchase altogether, when you forget your bags at home. After a few of these incidents, your memory will improve, I guarantee. This also means accepting that you will annoy people when you hold up the line at the check-out because at the question "Paper or plastic?" you'll realize that you'll have to run out to get the canvas bags that you left in the car (For me, having to drag two little kids adds a whole other dimension of inconvenience to this task!). But more often than not you will motivate others who will be inspired by your resolve to make a difference. If you are lucky, you will witness the person in line behind you purchase reusable bags for the first time because of your actions.

And hopefully, in 5, 25, or 50 years we'll be able to look out from Sandy Beach at the Atlantic and think it is still the most ridiculously beautiful thing we have ever seen.

JoAnn Mirise lives in Cohasset and hopes to see a big turnout at the town-wide clean up this weekend — meeting at Town Hall on Sunday, April 29th at 12:30pm.

~ Consider purchasing carbon offsets ~

COMMENTARY

Mimi White

I received a gentle nudge from a member of the Cohasset Alternative Energy Committee when he passed a note to me at our April meeting, mentioning that I had participated in a lot of carbon emissions with my recent airline trip to Vietnam. Although he was teasing me, I realized that this was a subject that I had not given any thought to. A single trans-Atlantic flight, in my case we flew over the North Pole, can emit as much greenhouse gas per passenger as a year of driving.

I believe that I, and all of us, need to be determined to minimize the ecological "footprint" of our lifestyles. I realized this is more than changing light bulbs, buying energy saving appliances, and driving a hybrid car, though those things are important. It is the way we approach all aspects of our lives, which includes understanding how a vacation can have a significant impact on the earth. Does this mean I have to give up flying?

With my adult children all over the country it would greatly interfere with my ability to keep track of my many grandkids! And give up my dream of revisiting India? I wanted to find a way to continue my travels but limit my negative impact on the earth.

I wanted to find a way to continue my travels but limit my negative impact on the earth.

As so often happens, I received a mailing about the same subject when COOP AMERICA had a lead article entitled "Carbon Offsets Demystified" in its flyer REALMONEY (March -April 2007). The article was on purchasing carbon offsets. What are Carbon Offsets? They are a way to fund projects that will prevent additional Green House Gases (GHGs) from being produced. I can purchase offsets equal to the number of tons of C02 my flight produced. Carbon offset providers sell the greenhouse gas reductions associated with projects like wind farms and methane-capture facilities to customers who want to offset the emissions they caused by flying, driving or using electricity. Carbon offsetting is one of many economic actions we can take to address climate change.

The first step is to do the "Math." I needed to find out how many tons of Green House gases (GHGs) were emitted over the course of my trip. I went to www.nativeenergy.com/coop and clicked on Travel Calculator. After I entered the data, I found that my share of the emissions was 8 Tons of GHGs. When I recovered from the shock, I decided to find out what "offsetting" is possible

I was informed that I can purchase Renewable Energy Certificates called RECs. I was given options for the type of projects I wanted to support:

- Sustainable Development Projects in developing countries.
- Farm and Landfill Methane Projects: this potent greenhouse gas is generated by livestock, or landfills, and it can be captured and converted.
- Wind projects

Putting more renewable energy into the electric grid will, over time, reduce the global warming emissions.

CO-OP AMERICA has recommended: The Climate Trust, NativeEnergy, Sustainable Travel International program through MYClimat and TerraPass as organizations that will put my offset purchase to work quickly. With all the concern about Global Warming, this is another way to address our personal footprint. With a check for $96 to NativeEnergy I am moving into a new way of helping to fund the installation of alternative energy.

Mimi White lives on Sheldon Road.

Body Image Treatment Research Study

DO YOU:
- Dislike the way any part(s) of your body looks?
- Think about your appearance for more than one hour per day?
- Engage in any behaviors intended to check on, hide, or fix your appearance?

If you answered 'yes' to any of these questions, and your primary concern is not related to unusual eating habits or weight concerns, you may be eligible to participate in a study at the Massachusetts General Hospital

Participants will receive a diagnostic evaluation and medication treatment at no cost.

How does Cohasset measure up?

Municipal Benchmarking: Cohasset-at-a-Glance

Source: Municipal Benchmarking (www.municipalbenchmarking.com). Serious Crimes include murder, manslaughter, rape, aggravated assault, robbery, larceny, burglary, theft and arson.

This chart shows the incidence of serious crimes committed in Cohasset in 2002 and 2003 per 1,000 residents. This index provides a way to gauge crime in Cohasset. The chart also shows the same information for the median of Cohasset's Benchmark Peer Group.

Municipal Benchmarking determined Cohasset's Benchmark Peer Group by analyzing 15 demographic traits to find the 20 most similar communities in Massachusetts. Cohasset's peer group includes Boxborough, Carlisle, Dover, Duxbury, Hamilton, Lincoln, Lynnfield, Manchester-By-The-Sea, Marblehead, Medfield, Norwell, Sherborn, Southborough, Swampscott, Topsfield, Wayland, Wenham, West Newbury, Westwood and Winchester. Municipal Benchmarking uses information collected from municipal and school district filings, state and federal agencies, associations, surveys, and information requests under the Massachusetts Public Records Law.

Municipal Benchmarking (www.municipalbenchmarking.com) provides municipal officials, education administrators, citizens, labor leaders, realtors and other interested parties with unbiased data and analysis to help make more informed decisions.

Judging a community by its peer group

The Cohasset Mariner is publishing a new feature: Cohasset At-A-Glance. Cohasset At-a-Glance is a series of charts, which compare Cohasset to its Benchmark Peer Group, the 20 most similar communities in Massachusetts. Each week the chart will look at a different area of interest in Cohasset's municipal government, such as taxes, police spending, fire staffing, municipal salaries, education spending, debt and land use.

The At-a-Glance charts were prepared by Municipal Benchmarking, LLC, a Waltham-based company that provides data and analysis to help municipal decision-makers, education officials, taxpayers, union members, such as teachers, and others make more informed decisions.

Community Newspaper Company, publisher of the Cohasset Mariner, entered into an agreement with Municipal Benchmarking this year to present this data to readers in a series on weekly charts.

Cohasset paid Municipal Benchmarking LLC roughly $7,500 for the full report which is available at Town Hall.

New Transportation Network voted

The School Committee voted unanimously to accept a three-year contract with the Southeast Transportation Network. The new network will provide transportation to out of district special education students — and yield potential transportation savings.

The Southeast Transportation Network is a designated program of the North River Collaborative. The Network will serve participating school districts and transport students to their out of district schools. By regionalizing transportation, the Network will have cost sharing and lead to cost savings in each district.

At the last meeting of the School Committee on April 5, there was some hesitation to enter into a three-year commitment. The Committee requested that business manager Dave DeGennaro ask the Network if they could enter a one-year contract. The Network responded by saying they are looking for a three-year commitment, citing liability and capital purchase and that other districts have entered into three-year agreements making it unfair if Cohasset signed a one-year agreement.

The Network will serve participating school districts and transport students to their out of district schools.

However, the email indicated that "if [the Network] cannot save Cohasset money, there is no obligation." School Committee member Alfred Slanetz requested that this language be included in the contract as an addendum.

A yearly start-up assessment equal to 10 percent of the projected annual transportation cost will be billed to each district in July and will be offset against the fourth quarter invoice.

Currently, the Network is posed to transport to ten specialized schools, none of which Cohasset student presently attend. DeGennaro reported that if Cohasset gets a student who can use the network savings could average between 10 and 15 percent.

Stormwater Committee set to sail

To draft regulations by June

"It's going to take ten years to solve the problems, I think a committee like yours would be invaluable in the effort."
— Gary Vanderweil, Board of Selectmen

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

When a heavy rain falls in Cohasset, the stormwater goes into the town's drainage system picking up contaminants along the way and, for the most part, ending up polluting the town's bodies of water. Taking the leadership role in this pervasive problem is the Stormwater Committee, a temporary committee established last summer.

To keep the lines of communication open as they investigate the issues and determine the best solutions to the problem from a political and a physical standpoint, two representatives from the Stormwater Committee met with the Selectmen on Monday night.

Stormwater Chairman Martin Nee and Steve Bobo conversed with the Selectmen over what the function of the committee and what they need to accomplish in the coming months. Several interested citizens also sat in to hear the presentation.

Chairman Gary Vanderweil began with a summary of where he felt the Selectmen and the Stormwater Committee was after their last meeting in March. He said there was objection to an additional layer of bureaucracy and that stormwater best management practices may be monitored without the establishment of a new full-fledged commission.

"In order to have effective management of the stormwater issue, we need to have some form of committee," said Chairman Marty Nee, although what form that committee will eventually take in the town bylaws is still up for discussion.

"If there is somebody named stormwater, they'll probably come to us," said Stormwater Committee and Board of Health member Steve Bobo. Currently, besides this temporary committee, there is no one group responsible to hearing and addressing the citizen concerns over stormwater and flooding.

Nee named four conclusions that the Committee had reached in regards to the future and to solving the problem in Cohasset. First, the town needs to comply with the Clean Water Act, he said that within a year's time regulations that align with the federal guidelines will need to be in the town's bylaws. Second, an independent body that seeks and administers grant funds is a needed. Currently, the Stormwater Committee is pursuing a Section 319 federal grant that would defray the cost of the Little Harbor sewer expansion and drainage project.

Third, a stormwater committee would be responsible for developing, drafting and updating regulations. The group would take on an advisory role, working closely with existing committees and advise them on stormwater related matters. Lastly, Nee said he would like to see the committee facilitate the public process, identifying problems, proposing solutions and analyzing the impacts of those solutions.

Vanderweil said that a Town Meeting article is currently being drafted to request funds to hire an engineer to design a "conceptual phase master plan" for the town. He said that he envisioned the Stormwater Committee overseeing that engineer.

"It's going to take 10 years to solve the problems," Vanderweil said and could cost between $6 million to $10 million to implement the plan, "I think a committee like yours would be invaluable in the effort."

Selectman Ralph Dormitzer felt that guidelines and parameters would need to be set up for the Committee outlining its authority and if more regulations would need to be instituted in Cohasset beyond what the EPA will require in the Clean Water Act.

To that end, the Selectmen charged the Committee to draft specific regulations and bring those back to the Board of Selectmen for review by the end of June.

The Selectmen and the Stormwater representatives agreed that this problem is not going to be solved overnight or even in a matter of years. Drafting the bylaw that was indefinitely postponed at the Annual Town Meeting and drafting regulations have been and will be time consuming processes and delay implementation of actual solutions to the stormwater problems, Nee said.

"We will need real community support" to solve the problems, because many of the solutions will involve capital requests, said Nee, "We need an open and transparent process where everyone has a stake in the game."

The Stormwater Committee plans to hold another public hearing in the coming months for all interested citizens.

Bobo asked the Board of Selectmen about the future of the Stormwater Committee's term of service. The committee was given one year to fulfill their charge, that time period will be up this summer.

"You're doing a good job and we want you to stay," said Vanderweil.

Parker St. speed bump

Last summer, the Board of Selectmen authorized the placement of portable speed bumps on Parker Avenue for the summer season on a trial basis. This summer, the Selectmen have authorized their placement again. Town Manager Bill Griffin verified with the Police, Fire and DPW that there was no opposition to the speed bumps during the summer months. The Office of the Board of Selectmen did not receive any complaints last summer in regards to the speed bumps. The Selectmen voted 4-0 to re-install the speed bumps for this heavily trafficked street during summer months.

Commission promises better communication

rainfall was expected and the internal procedure went by the book, according to Coughlin.

The Sewer Commission insisted that scheduled upgrades to the plant in conjunction with the Little Harbor project will alleviate the overflow problem. More than $1 million will be spent to upgrade the plant to be able to serve the additional 450 homes in the Little Harbor district and address the recurring overflow issues.

The upgrades to the plant will be put at a higher priority for the Little Harbor project. Originally it was expected to happen later in the project timetable. Coughlin estimated that the upgrades will take about four months to complete, and it would be more than a year before any homes in Little Harbor would tie-in to the town sewer system.

A resident and abutter to the plant expressed doubt that the upgrade would solve the problem and wanted to see proof of it working properly before taxing the plant with more users.

"I don't want to patch up something that's going to affect my property and my yard," she said, "I'm not convinced that the plant upgrades are going to prevent overflow. There's an unknown here, stormwater, which is totally out of control."

The resident suggested that the Commission allow a year trial run following the upgrades to the plant to ensure that the system works properly and will prevent overflow into the meadow before adding additional users.

Coughlin said that essentially there would be a year trial run, if the plant upgrade is moved to the forefront of the project. Sewer infrastructure in the Little Harbor is not scheduled to be complete until mid-2009 essentially allowing a yearlong trial before any new users are added, Coughlin said.

The upgrade is multi-faceted. It will include the installation of 14 state-of-the-art membranes to more quickly process the incoming flow and deal with the additional 150,000 daily gallons that will be driven from the new hook-ups in Little Harbor. There will also be an extra step added to the treatment process; UV light will disinfect all effluent leaving the plant. The upgrade will increase the margin between normal wastewater flow (currently at 300,000 gallons per day), and excess capacity.

The crux of the upgrade for the abutters is the installation of an "extreme flow pipe" that will extend from the anoxic tank to the UV light chamber. The anoxic tank will decontaminate the overflow with chlorine tabs and then the UV light will disinfect the effluent further. The wastewater from the anoxic tank will mix with the fully treated wastewater in the UV chamber and travel to the harbor for discharge. The installation of the extreme flow pipe will reduce the likelihood of sewage overflow into the Jacobs Meadow like what happened last week. In the event of a large rain event, like the one last week, all overflow wastewater will be piped to the harbor as partially disinfected water.

The Sewer Commission is obligated by the Department of Environmental Protection to keep a schedule intact for the Little Harbor project. The discharge permit allowing them to discharge into the harbor is in its final stages and is expected to be in place by the coming week. Once the final permit is in hand, the project will go out to bid for four weeks. If this timetable is kept, the project will likely be awarded to a contractor by the end of May and is set to begin construction by the end of June.

As far as health issues are concerned, the Sewer Commission knows that the fecal coliform and enterococci levels in the overflow were "bad."

"We can sample to the cows come home but we know that it's going to be bad," said Sewer Commissioner John Beck. The tests done by resident Jim Drysdale were thousands of times over the state safety limit for both fecal coliform and enterococci.

"Until we do the upgrade, that's going to be the norm [in the event of an plant overflow]," explained Cunning.

The Sewer Commission reported that it has yet to receive their results from the samples taken from the overflow last Monday night. When a neighbor asked why the results have taken so long Cunning said that multiple tests on the sample caused the extended period of time for return.

Two major contributors to the overflow last week were discussed — stormwater and inflow and infiltration (I and I), both town-wide issues exacerbate the problems at the plant during a large rain event. Drains as far back as Forest Avenue end up in James Brook. "I and I" is the term used to describe the ways groundwater and stormwater enter a sewer system. Inflow is water that is dumped into the sewer system through improper connections, such as downspouts and groundwater sump pumps. Infiltration is groundwater that enters the sewer system through leaks in the pipe.

Sewer Commissioner Ray Kasperowicz said that hundreds of thousands of dollars have been spent on trying to address "I and I" issues and whenever there are able to fix problems in one area, "they pop up in another part of town."

Much of the "I and I" problems are suspected to be due to old, cracked clay pipes in the downtown area. Illegal sump pumps also contribute to the issue. Coughlin says they are working to determine the root causes of I and I, but stressed that it takes time.

Both neighbors and the Sewer Commission agree, stormwater is at the core of the overflow problem.

The stormwater is the real problem, said an Elm Street abutter, "[The Wastewater Treatment Plant] is just adding icing to the water."

The Sewer Commission will work with the abutters on increased notification and more open communication. The plant operators now have a list of emergency contacts. Cunning will notify Kathy Crosby of 75 Elm St., no matter what the hour, in the event of an overflow. An email will be sent out and the Connect-CTY call will be placed immediately to abutters in the future. The neighbors additionally requested information on the progress on the Little Harbor project and plant upgrades.

Sewer board votes new rate hike

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

The "average" sewer user is going to see an increase of about 9 percent or about $27 in their quarterly bill ($108 for a year).

The Sewer Commission voted Monday to raise the rate from $7.60 to $8.60 per 100 gallons of wastewater per quarter. That means the "average" household which was defined as one using 220 gallons of water per day would see a quarterly bill of $258 (including the increase), Sewer Commissioner Ray Kasperowicz said. (Sewer bills are based on water meter readings.)

About a dozen residents of the North Cohasset and Central Sewer Districts attended Monday's public hearing on the rate increase. Donna McGee of the Advisory Committee was in attendance and praised the commission for conducting the hearing and seeking public input.

"Our sense is that you are running a very tight ship," she said. "Conducting a public hearing is a very good way to go about the town's business. It is good public policy every time you consider a rate increase."

The Sewer Department operates through an enterprise fund meaning that it is self-sustaining through user fees and does not use money from the town's general fund.

There are two sewer districts in Cohasset: North Cohasset that is connected to the Hull Treatment Plant and serves about 330 homes; and Central Cohasset, which is connected to the wastewater plant off Elm Street, and serves about 800 homes. About 48 percent of the town is sewered.

The sewer department pays Hull for the wastewater sent to its plant but handles problems with grinder pumps and pumping stations in the North district. Costs in the Central District include electricity, major maintenance issues, and the services of Veoila, the contractor that runs the plant. Sewer rates also cover debt service. The department also uses the services of consulting engineer, Dan Coughlin, of Coughlin Environmental Services.

The sewer commission was authorized at last fall's Special Town Meeting to borrow $1 million to deal with the problem of infiltration and inflow (leakage) that is partly responsible for overwhelming the plant during major storm events.

"Conducting a public hearing is a very good way to go about the town's business. It is good public policy every time you consider a rate increase."
— Donna McGee, Advisory Committee

Sewer Commission members say the rate increase will allow them to put money into the depreciation fund that would be used for emergencies and to replace equipment when it breaks down.

Kasperowicz explained that the estimated 450 new users in Little Harbor and along Atlantic Avenue that would be added to the Central district when the plant is upgraded would be footing the bill for that project, including the connection from the foundation of the home to the stub in the street, and their share of the cost of the collection system and pipes in the ground. The estimated 27 new users along Rust Way and Deep Run will also pay for connecting to the North Cohasset District.

"There will be no additional burden on the general taxpayer other than being guarantor of the debt," he said.

Kasperowicz also noted that the addition of new users would spread fixed costs over more users, which could have the effect reducing the rate of future rate increases.

Several members of the audience asked questions about the grinder pumps installed in the North district, which have a 10-year warranty that is drawing to a close. The Sewer Commission explained that after the 10 years are up, the homeowner is responsible for repair or replacement. However, the commission is conducting research to find the best pumps that could be purchased through the commission.

The commission also suggested that homeowners with irrigation systems install a second water meter, so the water they use for their lawns is not including in the sewer cost calculation.

Commission members also explained the contract with Hull has about 20 more years to run. Currently the town sends about 60,000 gallons of the 80,000 allowed to Hull. Under the agreement, Hull assesses Cohasset at the same rate that it does its own users, Kasperowicz said.

The new rates, the first in two years, will take effect in May and show up in the August bill, the commission said.

A team effort

Entire roster contributes to CHS girls tennis' 5-0 start

By Mark Goodman
MGOODMAN@CNC.COM

At 5-0, the Cohasset High girls tennis is off to a typically strong start.

What isn't so typical, however, is the number of players that have contributed to the team's early success.

With three out of seven regular starters graduating from last year's team, head coach Gigi Meehan has called on nearly everyone on her 16-girl roster to play at least one match so far this season. It's hard to argue with the results, as after a hard-earned 3-2 win over a good Westwood team to start the season, Cohasset has won its last four matches by a score of 5-0.

This year's team is built on the foundation of four players: senior captains Elizabeth and Charlotte Landon, and juniors Meg Anderson and Sally Meehan.

Anderson and Meehan have dominated in first and second singles, respectively, so far this season. The two combined to lose just three games in the Westwood match and haven't looked back. Gigi Meehan (Sally's mother) said she and assistant coaches Kathy Prevett and Leah Ridpath had some difficulty deciding which of those two players would compete in the top spot in the lineup.

"That was our biggest dilemma, having two juniors with very equal ability," said coach Meehan. "We've never had a situation where our two best players are in the same grade. Before, seniority always counted, but that's obviously not a factor in this case."

The Landon sisters, meanwhile, have been perfect captains, said their coach.

"They've really stepped up to the plate. It's a lot like having two more coaches out there," Meehan said. "They lead by example on and off the court. They're wonderful at training doubles players; the young girls really look to them for guidance and coaching."

Enjoying a taste of the Dutch game

A DISPATCH FROM AMSTERDAM

MARK GOODMAN

It was about two weeks before my trip to Amsterdam that I received an interesting bit of news.

The football match between local power Ajax Amsterdam and Dutch league opponent NAC Breda had been rescheduled from Sunday, April 15 to Friday, April 13, at 8:30 p.m. local time.

My flight to Amsterdam – including a stopover in Frankfurt, Germany, all adding up to an 11-hour journey – was set to land that Friday morning at 9 a.m. Combine all of this with the fact that I'm simply incapable of sleeping on an airplane, and this was set to be an excruciatingly long day.

At about 3 p.m. Amsterdam time (9 a.m. in Boston), after getting off the plane, getting my luggage and doing a little exploring to acclimate myself to the city, I managed a 90-minute nap – my first rest in over 24 hours. Upon awakening, it was off to Amsterdam ArenA to take in some of the pregame atmosphere.

Still in a rather groggy, disjointed state when I got off the Metro stop just outside the stadium, I could be forgiven for thinking I had just stumbled upon a spaceship. Amsterdam ArenA opened in 1996, and it is certainly the most modernistic stadium I can recall being in, between the escalators enclosed in glass portals, the retractable roof, and the seats inside a dashing rainbow of red, orange, blue and green.

The culinary fare on the concourse outside the gate left a little to be desired. Aside from the endless row of hot dog stands sitting along the street, there was a fast food stand from which most of the locals appeared to be ordering one of two things: french fries with mayonnaise (a Belgian delicacy, I've learned), or some gooey concoction (it looked like relish

Softballers on the mend

By Mark Goodman
MGOODMAN@CNC.COM

After a rough 0-4 start, the Cohasset High softball team has gotten back on the right path with two wins in three games this week.

Following a 21-3 demolition of Hull on Monday and a 3-2 defeat of Harwich the following day, the Skippers took a lead into the bottom of the seventh against perennial power Hanover before an error and a passed ball gave the Indians a 9-8 victory.

The Skippers committed six errors against Hanover, something head coach Deb Bostwick will hope to have corrected as her team enters a critical stretch for its hope of again qualifying for the Div. 3 state tournament.

"We beat ourselves against Hanover. It was disappointing," Bostwick said. "But I was so proud of them for holding their own against a top-notch team like Hanover."

The highlight for Cohasset was a four-run third inning, led by a double from Carly Salerno and singles from Carly Zappolo, Christina Pinkus and Sammi Lehr. All four players crossed the plate in the inning.

After Hanover came back to take a 7-5 lead, Cohasset tied it with a pair of runs in the top of the fifth. Virginia Spofford led off the frame with a walk and came around on an RBI triple by Pinkus. Meredith Kelly hit a ground ball to knock in Pinkus.

Anna Haggerty had what could have been the game-winning hit in the top of the seventh with an RBI single to plate Spofford, who had walked, advanced to second on a passed ball and stolen third. It wasn't to be, however, as those miscues in bottom of the seventh cost Cohasset the upset.

In the midst of the defensive struggles, however, was an

The Cohasset High baseball team got off to a reasonable 2-1 start in its hope to make it to the state tournament. Those hopes have taken a hit, however, after three straight losses.

Cohasset played a tough game against Cardinal Spellman until Spellman's bats went on a rampage, scoring six runs in the top of the sixth to take the lead and win the game 9-4.

Starting for Cohasset was junior ace Brian Hill who, for the first time, struggled with his control. Hill gave up five walks in 5 1/3 innings pitched. And although he gave up six runs, only three of them were earned after two errors.

All three of Cohasset's starting pitchers appeared in the game as junior Dave Snowdale gave up three unearned runs in two-thirds of an inning. Fellow junior Sam DeGiacomo pitched a scoreless seventh inning for Cohasset.

Snowdale contributed with a huge triple that drove in two runs.

Lacrosse continues to grow in region, country

By John Collins
JCOLLINS@CNC.COM

Over the last couple of years the game of lacrosse has grown in many aspects.

It has grown in participation, number of teams, sponsoring, organizations and popularity around the country. A lot of this is due to the media and the attention that the sport is getting. Over the last decade the growth in participation across the country has been doubling almost every year.

The same holds true for the South Shore area. For a while lacrosse has been common for a lot of towns in the area. In others, it was rarely played, but now almost every town in the South Shore has a youth and high school program for both boys and girls.

The growth in lacrosse is inevitable and there are no signs of a stop in its popularity in this area. Lacrosse really has no limits in its growth in all of its areas.

Regionally towns that are at different points in developing the sport, but all are heading in the same direction, and that is up. There are towns that have a strong prestige for lacrosse and there are some who have only had a youth program for a couple of years and have just started a varsity squad in lacrosse. There are teams like the Duxbury boys and Norwell girls team that are two-time state champions, and there are schools like Pembroke, Hull, Silver Lake and Abington who have a varsity team for the first time this spring.

"The growth in lacrosse is booming in the South Shore because it is a spring sport in which a multitude of players can be used during a game."

Mike Blanchard, South Shore Girls Lacrosse League president

During the spring season Abington is known for a strong girls softball organization. Their high school team is always one of the best teams in the South Shore year in and year out. The growth of lacrosse might not affect the softball team's success right away, but it has created some problems for other towns that have a lacrosse program in the spring.

Green Wave head coach Meg Doherty has seen the growth in girls lacrosse over the past three years as a junior varsity team.

"The growth in girls lacrosse is happening because of how easy it is to pick up and that is so much fun to play," Doherty said. "Other sports like softball and track are more individual and lacrosse is more playing together as a team."

Comparing the lacrosse program to the softball program, Doherty said, "In terms of numbers we have more girls playing lacrosse, but in terms of success it will take a while to develop our program to be as successful as them and someday we hope to be as good."

In Hull, the program is young and upcoming. Right now the town has three youth boys and girls teams. The high school team is in its second year with a junior varsity program. Even though Hull's lacrosse program is not as developed as some neighboring towns, it has been growing extremely fast in the past couple of years.

A part of this growth is due to the work of Mike Blanchard for the Hull youth programs and the South Shore Girls Lacrosse League, of which he is president.

"The growth in lacrosse is booming in the South Shore because it is a spring sport in which a multitude of players can be used during a game and it is exciting and fun," Blanchard said. "On the girls side of the game it is extremely fast compared to other girls sports, and on the boys it involves a lot of contact that baseball doesn't contain.

"The only sport I remember that has had the same growth was soccer back in the mid-80's and compares to lacrosse in what is going through right now."

The game's origin

Lacrosse is one of the oldest sports in North America. The game's roots can be traced back to the Native Americans. The sport was first "discovered" by European settlers in the early 1800s on the Great Plains. It was originally named "baggataway" by the Indians and later was changed to lacrosse by the French, which denotes the stick or "crosse" with which the game is played with.

By the 19th century, lacrosse evolved to be less violent and became a shorter game in length. It became more of a sport than the way the Native Americans first played the game since its start back in the 15th century. As it began to be developed by the French the rules were changed drastically.

At the beginning of the 20th century high schools, colleges and universities began to play the game. Lacrosse became a nationally accredited sport and began to get recognition, as it was a medal game in the 1904 and 1908 Summer Olympics.

In the '30s a new spin was put on the game of lacrosse, as a 6-on-6 indoor version was created in Canada called box lacrosse. It quickly became, and remains, the dominant sport in Canada. Box lacrosse is not that common in America, but it is fastly growing across the country.

Lacrosse got its start in the New England area when Philips Andover Academy and Philips Exeter Academy were the nation's first high school teams in 1882.

The sport is growing not only in the number of players, but in the regions that it is played in. Lacrosse has primarily been popular along the east coast. However, its popularity has started to spread west to Colorado, California, Texas, and the Midwest, spurred by the sport's increasing visibility in the media.

As the growth over the past few decades has shown, lacrosse, "the fastest game on two feet" is a promising sport for all ages, nationwide and in the South Shore.

In the last two decades lacrosse has been growing exponentially to where it might eventually surpass baseball in terms of participation. Lacrosse has been growing so fast around this area that if it keeps up it may surpass baseball not only in player participation but also in the number of organizations.

Little League Baseball is the largest youth organization in the world with around 2.5 million kids, aged 5-16. This number is surprisingly large, but the US Lacrosse program is a ways behind right now, as it plans to reach 500,000 participants this year. The way that lacrosse has been extrapolating in the past decade shows that the number will continue grow.

According to the National Federation of State High School Associations, in the last 15 years there has been a 255 percent participation boost in boys high school lacrosse.

This is a very exciting time for lacrosse as it is broadening its borders. The growth of lacrosse has no limits, and that is evident in the development of high school programs. Many towns are expanding to have junior varsity and freshman teams, which is great for player development.

Where player development all starts is in youth programs. In Massachusetts there are many programs for kids, none bigger than the Mass Bay Youth Lacrosse League (MBYLL), which is home to all of the towns in Massachusetts for field lacrosse. This is the first youth lacrosse league developed in the state. This league is split up into five different regions and three different age groups (U11, U13, U15) where towns compete against other towns.

Then there are leagues outside of town programs, such as AAU lacrosse or New England Select Lacrosse League (NESLL), which are select teams that are more competitive and intense. There are also indoor leagues such as Top Gun Lacrosse and Max Lax in which players compete during the off-season.

In the South Shore area lacrosse has been around for a while. Some towns have had a lacrosse program for many years and some are just starting to get their feet wet. The Hingham Youth Lacrosse program has set a new attendance record this year with 293 boys registered and 41 coaches. The program also has 12 travel teams and 16 intramural teams.

"We are extremely pleased to see the tremendous growth in Hingham Youth Lacrosse," says program director Neal George. "This reflects the growth of lacrosse nationwide."

There is no argument that lacrosse is the fastest growing and most up-and-coming sport not only in this area but in all of the country.

As the growth over the past few decades has shown, lacrosse, "the fastest game on two feet" is a promising sport for all ages, nationwide and in the South Shore. Lacrosse programs are currently sprouting up rapidly in a lot of different places and this diversity can only lead to further enrichment of the sport.

CHS laxers sting Rams

By John Collins

Cohasset came through with a 10-4 victory over Marshfield last Friday afternoon, but the score doesn't tell the real story.

This was a hard fought battle from start to finish. Neither team showed any signs of giving up. They played intense, physical lacrosse from the face-off to the final horn.

"Marshfield always plays hard against us every year and always brings their A-game when they face us," said Cohasset head coach Stew Curran.

The game started off as a defensive battle in the first quarter. Marshfield possessed the ball on offense and worked it around the perimeter as they got some open looks with some off ball cuts.

Zach Triner put the Rams ahead early in the first quarter, ripping a shot past Skippers junior goalie Nate Porter (13 saves). Marshfield's defense was great in the beginning as they slowed down the skilled Cohasset attack-men with their zone-defense, allowing shots from the outside.

It wasn't just the defense that held out the vaunted attack of the Skippers; it was Rams junior goalie Matt Bak (17 saves) who came up big early. Besides his great stopping ability he was an excellent ball handler and passer, which helped the clear as they set up the offense.

"Matt stepped up and played a great game for us and kept us in the game in the first half and gave us a chance to win with a multitude of great saves," said Marshfield head coach Rick Peterson. "He has played great so far in the early part of the season with solid performances in every game this season and has a 4-2 record to show for it, and we hope that he can continue the great success that he has had already."

At the start of the second half Marshfield came out firing. They peppered the goalie with shots as Porter came up with some big saves. After making one of those saves Porter turned the ball over as the Rams capitalized on their hard ride as they went up 2-0 with a goal from Andrew Brown.

Cohasset started to commit penalties as they became frustrated and gave Marshfield an opportunity to go up by three. On that man-up they did make them pay, Triner netted another goal.

"We can't get penalties and give good teams such as Marshfield opportunities to score," said Curran "6-on-6 we can play with anyone; it just hurts us when we go down a man."

Cohasset came back with a goal from junior Mark Flibotte to get some momentum back on its side. But this did not phase Marshfield at all, as the Rams came back with a nice goal that was set-up by Anthony Centeio with a nice find to Chris Walker, who finished it off as they went up 4-1.

This seesaw battle continued as the Skippers came back with two nice goals of their own right before the half. This swung the momentum back to their side.

At the half the Rams had the lead but Cohasset looked to be coming on strong.

"I am happy how or team played in the first half we looked really good, especially with a team that was missing a lot of starters and seasoned varsity athletes away on vacation," said Peterson. "Half of our team today was made up of JV players and they played a great game and I am proud of them and how they stepped up."

On the other side at half time Curran said, "We need to work on ball possession and finishing our opportunities when they come. We hit a lot of pipes and their goalie played great. The opportunities were there, we just had to finish them off and put them home."

At the beginning of the second half the Rams played the opposite of the way they did in the first. They looked flat and Cohasset looked like a new team. The Skippers came out and put two quick goals passed Bak.

Marshfield came back strong and looked to get the equalizer. They moved the ball well on offense, but the Rams' midfielders could not drive from the top on Cohasset defenseman Jeff Brown. Brown and his fellow defensemen Jack Cuneo, Conor Holway and Ryan Kucinski shutout the potent offense of the Rams throughout the whole second half.

"Jeff is a special defenseman, he works hard, is a smart player and cannot only contribute on defense but in the offensive game too," said Curran.

As the game wore on the Rams, who were short-handed with players, grew tired as the Skippers wore them down. This is where they capitalized in the final quarter to take control of the game.

Scoring goals in bunches Cohasset's offense took over the game, led by their stud attack men Mike Grimm (one goal and three assists) and Flibotte (four goals, one assist). What made this fourth quarter run possible was great face-off wins by Chuck Czerkawski as they maintained ball control throughout all most all of the second half.

The final score was 10-4, but the final result does not tell the real story.

"We were without our starting defense and other key players from vacation, and it would have been tough even if we had them against a great ball possession team like Cohasset, but I am happy with the performances of all my players today," Peterson said.

The boys topped Abington 15-1 on Tuesday, led by Grimm's six-goal performance.

That game served as a tune-up for a challenging group of games, starting yesterday (April 26) against Duxbury in a contest played after the Mariner went to press.

The boys host Martha's Vineyard Saturday at 1 p.m., followed by a Tuesday night matchup with a much-improved Norwell team at 7 under the lights at CHS. On Thursday, the Skippers travel to take on archrival Scituate at 6 p.m. at SHS.

COHASSET YOUTH LACROSSE

Boys

Cohasset U-15 Blue bested Lakeville, a first year program, by a score of 10-2 last Sunday.

On a perfect day for lacrosse, the real story was of sportsmanship and maturity. Cohasset was far more skilled in executing the fundamentals of ground balls, clearing and riding, face-offs, and setting up in the 1-3-2 offense; and did so with quiet confidence. In a game with few penalties, Cohasset's Blue squad executed on their game plan with precision.

Gus Helbock netted a goal on a nice feed from Charlie Coffman. Alex Kinnealey had two goals and one assist. Chase Murphy had one goal and one assist. Morgan Grasz had a nice assist and two goals. And Derek Youngman buried four goals.

During the fourth quarter many players showed their team spirit by switching to positions they don't normally practice. This ensured that everyone, including our visitors, had the fullest lacrosse experience. Nicely done, Blue squad.

The Boys U-15 White team faced an aggressive squad from an emerging Bridgewater lacrosse system on Sunday at Milliken. White gave its second consecutive strong performance out of the gate - with another high scoring, well rounded and rock solid defensive effort, ending in an 11-1 win for Cohasset.

The Whites dominated the offensive end, scoring five times in the first half, all by Thomas Flibotte (who finished with six goals). And when the ball didn't find the net, John Collins (1G), Pete McKenna and Brennan Bukowski (2A) were there to grab the loose balls and feed the attack game some more.

Charlie Neaves (1G) and Mitch McNary (1G) all found the net on impressive give-and-goes from the attack line. Danny Czerkawski (1G) and Sam Leahy (1G) had tremendous success in "back-to-back" long pole rushes from their defensive positions for strikes later in the game.

A strong performance by Jack Carrier in transitional play was the key to many White strikes all game. Sam Richardson (2A), Bukowski and John McGoldrick (1A) all had excellent feeds in creating team offense with Graydon Foley getting in on the action as well. A big story on the day was the "Ministers of Defense" - Leahy (1G), Dean McNary and Geoff Swain all fronting Kyle Healy (11 saves) and quashing any effort Bridgewater attempted all day.

Although White had three strong long pole rushes from defense (Czerkowski/McNary /Leahy), Healy made the Bridgewater record books - by scoring on himself - late in the third period on a "round the world" clear, which was the Bridgewater team's first ever goal in a lacrosse game.

On a perfect Sunday afternoon at Milliken Fields the Cohasset U-15 "Black Plague" triumphed in convincing fashion over a well-stocked Hingham team.

This was the first test of the Cohasset squad, which won the opening face-off and never looked back. The final score of 6-2 rewarded the smart play of a team with only two substitutes against a Hingham roster four lines deep. Patient passes, solid clears and select fast breaks characterized a match that required more thinking than running by the short staffed team.

A stellar performance was delivered through four full quarters by goalkeeper Eric Wasel. He aggressively challenged the few Redmen who managed to penetrate the solid defense of Brendan Horigan, Patrick Dunn and Matthew Swanborg. His crisp and confident clears sparked offensive fireworks including full field charges by his relatively rested D-men.

Attack pressure cycled through X-man Chase Baldwin with a rotating cast of characters from the winded midfielder ranks including strong support from Alex Evans and Andrew Whitney. The offense smartly spread their efforts over the full width of the field, which helped open up the slot for clean cutters and open shots. While Cohasset's stamina was impressive, their keen anticipation and solid position play were more important factors in putting this one in the win column.

The first two goals came quickly in a combination of smoking bounce shots by Luke Ernst, assisted by Mark Dick. Baldwin fed Chris Lundy for a sweet tally early in the second period. The first half scoring concluded with an unassisted rhino charge to the crease by Horigan.

The second half found Ernst again stretching the back of the net, as did David Hill off a Lunde feed. Ernst sacrificed several shots for excellent passes off his fast breaks, including three to Adrian Dunne, whose shots were thwarted by Hingham defenders.

Cohasset Black, with their selfless style of play, exceptional goaltending and upbeat attitude, were impressive in their opening foray. Continued performance at this level should ensure a successful and entertaining season for players and fans alike.

The Cohasset U13 Blue squad hosted Lakeville this past Sunday at Milliken. Playing at home for the first time this season, the team got off to a slow start against the new and athletic Lakeville squad.

Lakeville led after the first quarter 3-2, with both Cohasset's scores coming unassisted from Will Golden. Lakeville extended its lead to 8-3 at the half, with Cohasset's score coming from Henry Brown on a feed from Golden. The gap could have been greater if not for the aggressive defensive play of Blake Erler, Colin Bell, Nate Morse and Zach Strecker in the cage.

The second half saw a revived Cohasset team emerge to score five unanswered goals in the third quarter to leave the game tied 8-8 after three quarters. Credit goes to the Cohasset midfielders who controlled the ball on both sides of the midfield line, specifically Ryan McGovern, Blair McGowan, Cole Kissick, Ryan McKeon and Chris Lund. Cohasset's scores came from McGowan with an assist to Kissick, Golden from McGowan, and unassisted tallies from Erler, Chris Sylvia and Charley Michalowski.

Cohasset continued its fine ball control in the fourth quarter, as its attack of Matt Arnold, Golden, Tommy Powers, Michalowski and Sylvia demonstrated patient offensive control. Cohasset scores from McGowan and Sylvia put the game out of reach and Brown held the visitors to one second half score, leading to a final 10-9 Cohasset victory.

Next up for the squad is a road game against Bridgewater this weekend.

The Boys White U13 team traveled to Whitman-Hanson this past weekend to pick up after the vacation break for some warm weather lacrosse action. Unfortunately, several of the troops were still away and while it was a great day for the spectators, a diminished squad with few subs quickly began to feel the heat out on the field as they took on a very strong and surprisingly talented WH team that had plenty of fresh legs coming in throughout the contest.

While it wasn't much of a match on the scoreboard, with the hosts dominating most of the play from end to end, just the sheer determination of the Cohasset kids to stay and play in the moment made them all winners just the same as the Popsicles seemed to even out the double-digit loss. Regardless of the score, Cohasset did have some great highlights.

Axel Seppala had a strong showing on the attack and chalked up his first goal of the season with a double combo fake through the middle. Alex Kent seemed to waltz through every defender on his way to burying the rock in the opening quarter and Mark Brown finished the day with a nifty left handed inside roll to lift up everyone's spirits and to give the crowd something to cheer for.

Fans also saw the true definition of "utility players" as everyone played everywhere to help out. Several players jumped into new spots with Joey Sestito and John Leahy picking up long poles to help shore up the defense with Brendan Queenan and Connor Green. Derek Benson and Brown seemed to play everywhere - including splitting the goalie duties.

Jimmy Maher carried the midfield corps for the entire game with help from John Mills, Jack O'Brien, Chandleer Skolnick, and anyone else on the sidelines. The team looks to be back to full strength next weekend and to get back onto the winning track with a homestand.

For the U13 Black team, the offensive pressure was bearing down on them from the face-off. Goalie Jimmy Lydon made 11 saves in the first half. The hustling defensive unit of Teddy Patsos, Jack Stanganelli, Hamish Redfield and Jack Leffel were under constant pressure but never stopped pushing back.

With only two middie lines, Hunter Forrer, Devin Kennedy, Will Lucas, Drew Nahill, Joe Silvia and Anthony Nahill ran longer and harder than any college player could last. On the attack, Matt MacCormick, Jack Conti and Max Montgomery made the best runs against a tall and imposing defense.

At the half, Jack Conti took over at goalie, as Lydon jumped into an aggressive defense role, Montgomery flew into middie and Stanganelli stepped in to attack. With these adjustments, Cohasset U13 Black out shot its opponent 6-5.

Montgomery led the charge with an unassisted goal and followed up with a second. The entire team found the momentum, but the clock was on Hingham's side. The best teams in lax play hard, play fair and never give up. That is the game the Cohasset boys played on the first great day of spring.

The Blue U11 squad won a hard-fought game against Hingham, 7-5.

At the first whistle, Ben Buckley won the face-off and ran straight for the crease for the first goal of the day. He followed with another fast break and second goal. The next four goals were also from fast breaks, showing a strong midfield effort against a weak Hingham defense. It is common for the profile of the game to evolve with the new U11 players, so expect to see more feeding to the attackmen as the season progresses.

Jeff Powers was a force on Sunday scoring four goals. The Hingham team played a rough game but Cohasset held them off, supported by strong midfield performances by Graham Blackburn, Liam McHugh, Graham Schwandt and Jack Coffman.

In the second half, Cohasset worked as team and scored three more goals. The attack began to look for open space and began to receive passing feeds from the middies. The Cohasset defense, lead by goalies Curtis Golden and Powers, was hard to penetrate. Both Harry Serakis and Matt Froio were powerful at defense during the game. Great saves by both players limited Hingham's score. Tim Hayes, Hayes Keniley and newcomer Owen Burnsee all contributed with strong, competitive action.

The game was won in the second half due to the focus, hustle and good field sense and the team is well on track for a great season.

The U11 White team went to war on Sunday and emerged victorious. The young laxers met a Whitman-Hanson team which came to play lacrosse.

After a very close first quarter with goals by Adam Benson and A.J. Kucinski, Whitman-Hanson took off on a rampage and went into halftime with a very comfortable 8-4 lead. The game had become very aggressive by half and the White team knew it would have to battle back with both physical determination and skill if it was going to come away with a W.

Justin Fein had been a stalwart on defense, making a number of big plays and keeping the game in reach, but it was going to take a complete defensive effort the rest of the game. The third period started with WH getting a quick goal and it looked as though the wheels were coming off. Whitman-Hanson had a five-goal lead and a lot of confidence.

The next face-off would be crucial and Cohasset needed the ball. That's when Patrick Holway went to work. During the next minute and a half, Patrick won three face-offs and transitioned for three breakaway goals leading the way for Cohasset to close to within two. On the next face-off the midfield of Nick Lydon, Owen Kafallinos, and Cole Morrison got the ball behind to Benson who made a great feed from behind the cage to Kucinski who, with a quick stick, put the ball over the goalie's right shoulder and closed the score to within one.

Benson's feed was pinpoint accurate and set the tone for the rest of the game. With the defense playing solid all around with Luke O'Brien, Michael Yerardi and Jake Burchill holding off the frustrated WH team and Ian Kennedy playing an outstanding game in his debut as team goalie, there was no denying this Cohasset band of warriors. The aggressiveness continued to grow as Fein kept making huge plays on defense with Chris Lydon playing hard defensive middy, and Max Fitzgerald throwing his body and stick at the WH middies, who were slowing down and getting weary as the first hot game of the year was taking its toll.

In the fourth quarter, Holway notched a fifth goal for the day and Connor Hayden tallied on a nice feed from Morrison. Sean Mavilia and Levante Haber got into several scraps for the ball, and Owen Burchill and Cal Robbins provided some much needed ball possession as Cohasset pulled out to a slight lead with just a few minutes left.

With two minutes left, Cohasset called a timeout with an 11-10 lead. Ball possession was called for to preserve the win and ball possession was delivered.Final score Cohasset 11, Whitman-Hanson 10. Congrats to both teams for a hard fought and well played game.

amazing catch in right field by Lehr in the first, one that resulted in a double play as the Hanover baserunner had taken off from second, assuming the ball would go over Lehr's head. Bostwick said the catch saved what likely would have been a triple.

The Skippers (2-5 overall, 2-2 South Shore League) are off until Monday, when they travel to Norwell to take on the Clippers at 3:30 p.m. That kicks off a stretch of four games in four days, as Cohasset will then host Mashpee on Tuesday (4 p.m. start), Carver on Wednesday (3:30 p.m.) and East Bridgewater on Thursday (also 3:30) in a rematch of a season-opening 7-3 loss.

Skippers 21, Hull 3

Pinkus went seven strong innings for the complete game victory, striking out seven and scattering six hits. The senior lefty also helped her cause at the plate, going 2-for-3 with two RBI and two walks.

Salerno and Christine Coner each had three hits, with Salerno knocking in four runs and Coner two. Lauren Mack came off the bench to hit a bases loaded double.

Salerno, the shortstop, and catcher Kristin Monaco both played well defensively for the Skippers.

Skippers 3, Harwich 2

It was Spofford's turn to excel on the mound against the Rough Riders, going 6 1/3 innings and allowing just five hits while striking out five. Pinkus came on in a jam in the seventh and recorded a pair of K's to get the save.

Kelly, Haggerty and Salerno all knocked in runs for Cohasset, while Pinkus went 2-for-3 with a pair of doubles.

Cohasset lax girls split Sunday games with Scituate

After a week off for Easter and another for rain, Cohasset's youth girls lacrosse program celebrated the sun on April 22 with four games in Scituate and two at home at Deer Hill School.

On the turf in Scituate, the 15-and-Under girls (grades 7 and 8) opened the day with two back-and-forth tight contests.

Cohasset's 15-U Blue team saw Kelsey Erler open the scoring just seconds into the game, only to be answered by Scituate's Sarah Ciolfi. Paige DeSisto gave Cohasset the lead back, only to see Ciolfi score again to tie it at 2 less than three minutes into the game. From there, Scituate went on a bit of a run, scoring three of the next four goals, with the spree broken only by a Whitney Jaffe score on a dash from behind the goal.

Trailing 5-3 and with all the momentum seemingly with the home team, Cohasset came back in style, scoring the next five goals. First it was Erler netting a feed from Anna Michalowski, then Jaffe nothched her second, before feeding Caroline Fein to give Cohasset the lead. Lindsay MacNaught netted an Eliza Kinneleay feed, and then DeSisto scored with time running out before the break to make the score 8-5 Cohasset.

Fein opened the second half with her second goal of the day, but Scituate scored four of the game's next five goals to draw to 10-9. Erler's third goal of the day was all that kept the home team from knotting things up. Late-arriving Kaci Kucinski then scored on her first shift, finishing a give-and-go with Jaffe, to make the score 11-9.

After Ciolfi – who scored half of Scituate's goals scored again, Kucinski won the draw, Jaffe scooped the loose ball and fed a wide-open Erler. Down the stretch Cohasset attacker Bridget Cahill came up with three key loose balls to lengthen Cohasset possessions, with the last of those scoops allowing MacNaught to close out the day's scoring with a warp-around from behind the cage.

Sarah Evans played her first game of the season in net for Cohasset, and picked up 9 saves, most in the second half allowing Cohasset to overcome the early deficit and stave off Scituate comeback attempts. After a shaky start, Taylor Kennedy, Lauren Hayes, Eloise Lucas and Emily Toomey did a good job clamping down on Scituate's offense.

Several girls playing with Blue normally play for the White team, and many of the Blue team members stuck around to return the favor as the White 15-U squad faced off against Scituate's Blue team.

The second game started in a very similar fashion to the first, with Erler scoring a quick goal, Scituate going on a run and Cohasset answering with scores from DeSisto and Jaffe. This time, however, it was Scituate that took charge, turning a 3-3- tie into a 6-3 lead. Kathleen Kelly tightened things up; after Scituate answered, Kucinski scored twice – once on a feed from Jaffe – to make it 7-6 Scituate at the halftime break.

Scituate stretched its lead to 10-7 early in the second half – with Sarah Ciolfi again victimizing Cohasset for two of those goals – before Erler netted a Michalowski pass and then adding a solo score. Jaffe's second of the game brought the deficit to one, and after a Scituate goal it was Kucinski and MacNaught who tied things up for Cohasset with just under 5 mintues remaining in the game.

From there, however, Cohasset suffered two costly turnovers in its offensive end, leading to two Scituate possessions and scores. Michalowski scored on a penalty shot with 30-seconds left in the game, and Cohasset called a time-out to set up a final play; after Scituate won the draw, Kucinski tracked down the ball carrier, stripped her of the ball and headed upfield, but her pass into the attack zone was off the mark and the game ended with Cohasset players scrambling for the loose ball in front of the net, and with Scituate holding a 13-12 lead.

Stephanie Brierly made 6 saves in the game, including two one-one-one stuffs down the stretch that went a long way to keeping the Cohasset comeback alive. Alex Weissman and Charlotte O'Callaghan both played well defensively and in transition, helping to key some of Cohasset's offensive bursts.

Next on the turf in Scituate, it was the Cohasset 13-U White team (grades 5 and 6), which lost a back-and-forth tussle against Scituate, 12-10.

Kristen Alexander and Hope Kissick led the offensive charge, each racking up three goals and one assist. Both of them scored some highlight reel goals, including a left handed blast from Kissick. Lexa Grasz notched two scores and Eliza Murphy and Isabella Flibotte both had one each. Peyton MacNaught had an assist and made several other excellent passes to help push the offense.

Cohasset struggled at the defensive end of the field, with the notable exceptions of Maria Buckley and Shannon McGowan, both of whom made several outstanding plays. Buckley also added an assist after clearing the ball the length of the field. Maddie Curley played the first half in goal and made several saves before being relieved by Molly Fitzgerald who finished the game and had a particularly good save on one Scituate high shot down the stretch, helping to hold Cohasset in the contest.

The 13-U White team is now 1-1 on the season.

The 11-and-Under teams (grades 3 and 4) played against Scituate at the Deer Hill School on April 22, and it was obvious that vacation was over for the Cohasset White team, as it dismantled Scituate, 10-3, raising its record to 2-0.

For most of the first half, the White team was able to hold on to the ball, but defenders Alexa Bleiken, Rebecca Brown, Megan Fitzgerald and Christine Guinee did a great job keeping Scituate off of goaltender Caroline Prescott, which allowed the home team to hold the visitors off.

The defense also keyed an effective transition game, with Kyle Burke keying one of the game's transitions with a lengthy run. Sisters Callahan and Madigan O'Neill shined in the second half as they took turns being the ball taxi, driving the ball from the defensive zone into the attack end of the field.

At the offensive end, midfielder Jackie Driscoll scored three goals, Charlotte Allard scored twice and center Dagmar Seppala added a goal and two assists. Colleen McGowan and Isabel McCarthy had single goals. McCarthy, along with Micaela Braun, Sophie Wolfe and Bennett Tierney helped the team retain possession of the ball and set up several of the goals with crisp passes that got the Scituate defense off balance.

The Blue 11-U team followed the White squad onto the field at Deer Hill, and also was able to raise its record to 2-0. Because of the school vacation week, several of the girls played in both games on the day, with the crossover making sure that both teams could complete their games.

Prescott was a big story in the 5-3 Cohasset win, making four saves to keep Scituate at bay throughout the afternoon.

Driscoll picked up three more goals in this game, with Seppala accounting for the other two. Alexandra Leahy added an assist on the day.

Defensively, the squad was led by Cassandra Lieberman and Caty Gilman, who each thwarted a Scituate attack by making key interceptions to disrupt the Sailors' offensive thrusts. Others contributing to a fine overall team performance included Madeline Tesauro, Colleen McGowan, Holly Maher, Lanie Schwartz, Corey Golden, Allie O'Callaghan, Samantha Mushin, Meredith Corry, Tierney, Wolfe and Burke.

Cohasset Youth Lacrosse's girls teams will return to the field on Sunday April 29 with a slate of six games at the Deer Hill School. For schedule details, visit www.cohassetlacrosse.com.

Just one of the copious hot dog stands that could be found outside Amsterdam ArenA.

and mayo mixed together) breaded and in the shape of a corn dog.

OK, enough about the food. Entering the grounds as soon as the gates opened and taking my seat in section 123, about 20 rows from the pitch, the empty, quiet (for now) stadium is a wondrous spectacle to behold. While lacking the pure, jaw-dropping nostalgia of Camp Nou in Barcelona, Amsterdam ArenA is an aesthetic beauty, between the 51,000-plus seats of different colors and the open roof (similar to the Dallas Cowboys' Texas Stadium, only with the roof clear to let in the still shining sun).

A Grolsch at Amsterdam ArenA goes for 3.25 Euro, which after converting to American dollars is about $2.50 cheaper than the $7 one pays at Fenway Park for a Coors Light. A better beer for less than two-thirds the cost, imagine!

After a couple Grolsches, it's game time. Almost immediately, the first-time viewer of Dutch football becomes enchanted with the style of play. While lacking the pure technical quality, mostly in the attacking third, of the big clubs in Spain, England and Italy, the passing I saw in this match was among the best I have seen.

The ball is always moving, and moving with a purpose. It is always going forward, but not in the sense too often seen in the English Premiership, with the ball being heaved forward mindlessly in hopes of landing at a forward player's feet.

No, it was going forward intricately, neat little diagonal balls that set up the next two passes en route to the opposing penalty area. Even the boys from Breda, clearly overmatched from the beginning, looked dangerous and moved the ball well on the rare occasions they possessed it.

But this was a night for Ajax (pronounced 'eye-ax' for those who don't know) in a 2-0 win for the locals. Kenneth Perez and Ryan Babel scored either side of halftime, with the former's goal coming on a well-placed penalty in the 18th minute after a Breda handball in the area.

For me, though, the performance of two players – one old and one new – stand out in my mind. One being Edgar Davids; yes, that Edgar Davids, the midfield engine with the infamous dreadlocks and goggles, the former world-class star for Juventus, who has since returned home to Holland after brief spells with Barcelona, Internazionale and Tottenham.

This was my second time seeing Davids live, the first being a mesmerizing performance while still in the black and white shirt of Juventus against Barcelona in a July 2003 exhibition at Gillette Stadium. For the first 20 minutes of the match against Breda, the 34-year old Davids looked a shell of his former self, slow to react defensively and all too willing to give up possession offensively.

But, for the final 70 minutes, it was vintage Davids. Dropping back to almost become a third central defender, Davids was always in position to snuff out Breda attacks, and get things going the other way. Davids was not to be denied with the ball, either, daring Breda midfielders to challenge him and leaving them grasping at turf as he snuck one silky forward pass after another past them.

Playing at left back for Ajax was a Davids look-alike (minus the goggles), 20-year old Amsterdam native Urby Emanuelson. Remember that name, soccer fans, because he will certainly be a star on the European and worldwide stage before too long.

While his defense was sound, it was what Emanuelson did with ball that truly stood out. The quick dribbling that left Breda defenders standing still, and the passing…oh, the passing. Time and again, with a perfect through ball to a striker making a run or a 40-yard cross that hit center forward Klaas-Jan Huntelaar on a dime, Emanuelson's passing was nothing short of immaculate.

After the final whistle, Emanuelson was announced as the man of the match, a fitting reward for a rousing performance.

On Wednesday, April 18, my last night in Amsterdam, Ajax hosted RKC Waalwijk in the semifinal of the Dutch Cup. I was lucky enough to attend this match as well, having purchased a ticket the day before at the box office for a measly 10 Euros.

Ajax won 3-1, on some shoddy goalkeeping and a 40-yard cracker of a free kick by midfielder Wesley Sneijder. The match will not be what I remember as much as the Metro ride back to the city's center afterward.

As I took my seat, just a few feet away were a group of about 15 young Dutch men and women, jumping and chanting at the top of their lungs.

"Oooohhhhhhhh e ooooohhhhhh, Aaaaaaaaajax Amsterdam…"

Another young Dutchman in front of me began banging the train window as hard as he could with both hands, doing so for the duration of the 20-minute ride back to downtown Amsterdam, his hands becoming red and callous in the process. That banging only persuaded his brethren to sing and chant louder and louder.

Now, a week later, that singing and chanting still remains vivid in my mind, as it did in the din of that night in Holland.

"Oooohhhhhhhh e ooooohhhhhh, Aaaaaaaaajax Amsterdam…"

with head coach Al Gallotta trying out three new starters. Making his first varsity appearance was John Sturino, the lone sophomore on the team. He reached base twice, once on a walk, and the other on an RBI single. Junior Chris Rose also got his first varsity start and recorded a hit. Fellow junior Ian Cundall also made his first start on varsity.

In the next two games the Skippers were not very lucky and had to face the number-one pitchers on both East Bridgewater and Harwich.

"The luck of the draw was not on our side," said Gallotta, as his team struggled against these two aces, racking up a total of only five hits in two games.

DeGiacomo was the starter for Cohasset against EB and pitched reasonably well to keep his team in the game. In a complete game, he allowed only two earned runs, six hits, and struck out six batters. Unfortunately, this was not enough to overcome the strong pitching of EB, and Cohasset was shut out for the first time this season, losing 5-0. Junior Kenny Muir's hit was one of only three for the Skippers.

Against Harwich, Cohasset was once again shutout, 8-0. For a second time the starting pitcher, Snowdale, was not to blame. With a hit from Hill and a hit from senior captain Nick Zappolo being the only two hits of the game for Cohasset, they had no chance to win the game. Despite a good overall pitching performance from Snowdale, said Gallotta, it was still impossible to win the game do to the lack of bats in the lineup.

Of the two shutout losses, Gallotta said, "No hitting; our pitchers did well, and our defense played strong as well."

The biggest problem from these games was the lack of hitting, especially from a veteran team. If Cohasset wants to make it to the tournament this year they will have to be a much better team at the plate, which they showed they can be in the first three games of the season.

The Skippers looked to stop their three game slide in a big game against their South Shore League rival, the Hull Pirates, on Wednesday and then continue on a winning path toward the state tournament.

Evan's Run set for May 20

As in years past, there will be live music and free food and drinks at the race grounds.

The 7th annual Evan's Run in Norwell is scheduled for Sunday, May 20.

The event, which features races for kids and adults alike, is named after Evan Henry, a Norwell native who passed away in July of 2000 at the age of 11.

Evan was autistic, and the Henry family decided soon after his passing to set up a foundation that raises funds for organizations that help autistic children like Evan. Thus, the Evan Henry Foundation was born. Proceeds from the event will go toward the foundation. To date, the race has raised over $185,000 for autistic children and their families.

Those interesting in participating can register online at www.evansrun.com, or at the pre-registration event the day before the race, May 19, from noon to 5 p.m. at Norwell High School. Runners can still register the morning of the race, but are strongly encouraged to do so beforehand. The cost to register is $10 for kids races, $20 for the main races.

Runners will also be able to pick up their bib number and timing chip on the 19th.

The children's races run from 8:30 to 9:30 a.m. There is a 200-meter event for kids 5-and-under at no charge. There will be a quarter-mile race for kids ages 6-8, and separate one-mile runs for kids ages 9 and 10, 11 and 12, and 13-15.

The main events start at 10:30 a.m., featuring 5K and 10K runs, as well as a 5K walk. The first 600 runners that sign up for these events will receive a free t-shirt.

Limited parking is available at Norwell High School, which serves as the starting and finishing point for all events. Runners can also park at the Hanover Mall, where there will be a shuttle to take you to the race.

As in years past, there will be live music and free food and drinks at the race grounds. There will also be a post-race party at McGreal's Tavern in Norwell Center, also included in the registration cost.

For more information about the race and the Evan Henry Foundation, log on to www.evansrun.com or call the race hotline at (617)347-2068.

at first doubles to earn the winning point against Westwood. Altholtz has played third singles in all four matches since, and has handily defeated her opponent all four times.

Altholtz is one of three freshmen on this year's team that have made – and will continue to make – an impact. Another freshman, Jenny Magruder, combined with Charlotte Landon in second doubles April 11 against Carver for a 6-2, 6-1 win. Freshman Margaux Donze, meanwhile, paired up with sophomore Jenny Cahill for a three-set second doubles win against Abington.

Cahill's sister, Jackie, a junior, teamed with classmate Sondra Hart in second doubles against East Bridgewater April 5 and won 6-2, 6-2. In Cohasset's most recent match, Tuesday against Harwich, there was yet another successful second doubles pairing, sophomores Lauren Allen and Jean Thomae, who won 6-3, 6-2. Allen played third singles against Westwood and played well in a 3-6, 4-6 loss.

Sophomore Maggie McGoldrick, a standout on the soccer pitch, brings her athleticism to the tennis court this spring and has earned three wins thus far. Giving Sally Meehan a rest at second singles against Abington, McGoldrick won 6-4, 6-3, and has since played with each of the Landon twins at first doubles for wins over Carver and Harwich.

Junior Katina Martone made her season debut at first doubles with Elizabeth Landon against Abington, and the duo came away with a 6-3, 6-0 decision. Rounding out the roster are two more good athletes in Chloe Koines and Maura Regan.

Cohasset will get another big test Monday afternoon at 3:30 when they travel to take on South Shore League archrival Norwell. The following day, the Skippers host a doubleheader with Duxbury and Mashpee.

Teacher David Ames looks up as the top horizontal of the CO2 cube is raised into place. The students anaAmes designed a pulley system to raise the "sonotube" 27 feet off the ground. The cube represents on ton of carbon dioxide, which is equivalent to the volume of CO2 emitted by one American over two days.

Parent volunteer Gerry Earle of Cohasset helps push the 27' tall sonotube into the base while putting together the carbon dioxide cube.

The cube is meant to make a visual statement about how each American contributes to the global warming problem.

Freshman Betsy Crawford raises her hands in celebration of the completion of the cube. Students led by science teacher David Ames have been working on constructing the CO2 Cube for almost two months.

Kelsea Hindley, a high school freshman, secures one of the 27-foot towers. The CO2 Cube will be officially unveiled for public viewing on Sunday in the Town Common. Assembly will begin around 11a.m.

DESTINATIONS

Its people power New Orleans revival

By Julie Ann Nevero
JNEVERO@CNC.COM

Everything looked essentially the same, until I tried to take a ride on the St. Charles streetcar.

You see, back in May of 2003, riding this trolley was my favorite thing about my visit to the city of New Orleans. Sure the streetcar's stiff wooden seats didn't exactly provide the most comfort, but the views seen from its glassless windows allowed its passengers to take in the full scope and beauty that is the Garden District.

Revisiting New Orleans this past March, I could see hints of the devastation Hurricane Katrina caused in the French Quarter, but I didn't truly see the effects it had on tourism until my fellow travelers and I tried to take a ride on this popular mode of transport.

We were informed the streetcar wasn't running this particular route because the electrical lines that power the trolley still needed to be replaced. As a result, this left us forced to try to peer out at the posh mansions along St. Charles Street from an overcrowded, stuffy bus with half-opened sliding windows. I could feel my heart sink as the bus rode alongside the streetcar's barely visible, dirt-covered tracks.

Traveling with four girls who had never been to the Big Easy before, it was disappointing for all of us.

That said, I actually found it pretty hard to feel bad for ourselves considering what the natives had endured since Katrina left their city in ruins. But if it affected them, they weren't showing it. Sure everyone we spoke to had a story to tell about Katrina, but no matter how tragic his/her tale it was clear the spirit of the people had never been broken. The locals were just as kind-hearted and welcoming as they had been to me nearly four years prior, long before the hurricane.

Take Gaynell, for example. This 60-something-year-old waitress at the Coffee Pot Restaurant in the French Quarter was among the first people we met and ended up being one of our favorites. Her pleasant attitude and great sense of humor had us back at her table three times during the week.

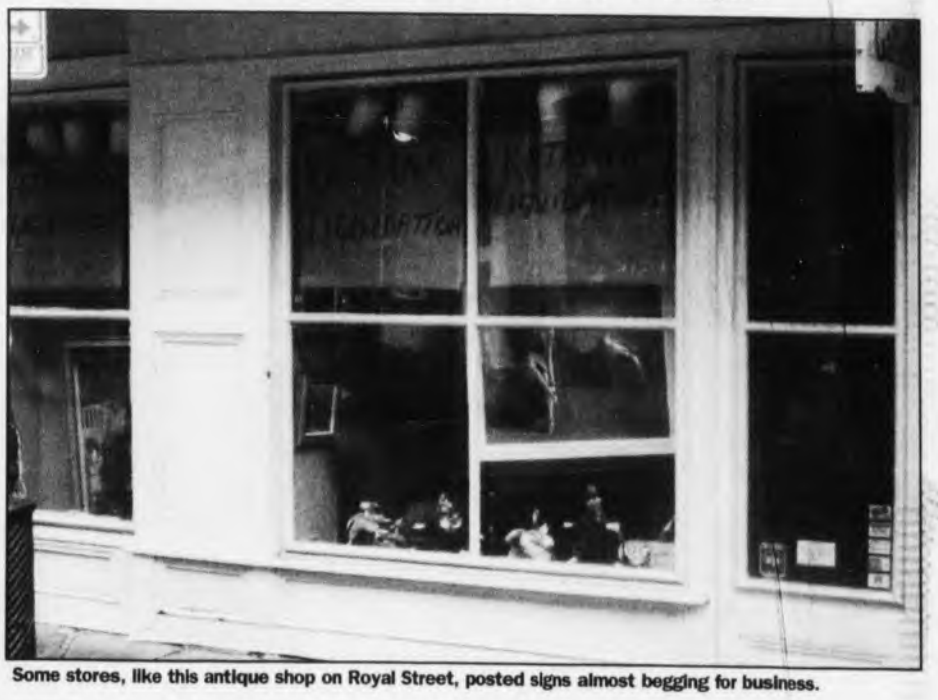
Here, we pose with Gaynell at the Coffee Pot Restaurant in the French Quarter. She was one of our favorite people that we met during our four-day trip to New Orleans. From left are: Danielle, me, Nicole, Gaynell, Meri, and Nadalee.

Jazz in Jackson Square is a great New Orleans tradition. Primarily on weekends, street performers set up shop in the square and perform for passersby. Everyone we saw was immensely talented.



Gaynell told us how her establishment had been closed for months and how tough it was for the grandmother of four to make ends meet. But before we could even frown, she offered: "But we weren't worried, honey. We knew ya'll would come back."

Then there was Steve. A waiter at NOLA - one of three of Emeril Lagasse's famed eateries - for six years, his outgoing and charming personality made our last night in the city one of the most entertaining. Calling us his "Boston girls," Steve refused to let any of us leave the table without him as an escort, recommended a top-notch bottle of wine, and joked about the Red Sox/Yankees rivalry with us.

And how about Shayna? The 27-year-old bartender at the Hard Rock Café told us she visited New Orleans in the months leading up to the hurricane and felt empty the minute she returned back home to Texas. So she boldly packed up her belongings and relocated to the Big Easy, simply because the city - and its people - had "captured her heart" and she "couldn't stand to be away from it."

I guess what I'm trying to say is I was prepared to see some devastation and to hear some sad tales. But I never could have anticipated the resolve of the people of New Orleans. They are a strong, close-knit, and truly resilient group. If you hadn't seen evidence of the hurricane plastered all over the networks you never would have known it had hit. The locals simply don't like to think of their city that way. It's forever a part of them, but not who they are.

Visit New Orleans for its non-stop party atmosphere, great culture, and music, but do it mostly for the people. You won't regret it.

Some stores, like this antique shop on Royal Street, posted signs almost begging for business.

Teachers Jack Buckley and David Magnussen have led the charge to get students involved in making a difference in the environment.

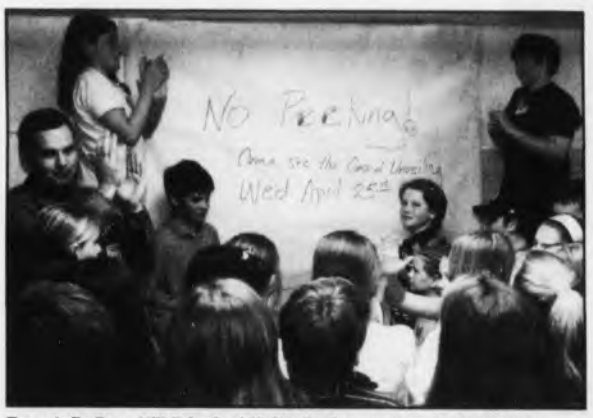
Cohasset High School teacher Mr. David Magnussen constantly emphasizes, "Science is a verb." Now, thanks to Mr. Magnussen and fellow teacher Mr. John Buckley, students of Environmental Research have the opportunity to immerse themselves in local issues and to perform useful scientific studies that make a real difference to the community. An extension of Mr. Buckley's Center for Student Coastal Research, founded in 2002, Environmental Research will bring students into the field to study the pollution of Cohasset's watershed, specifically the James Brook area. This class will also introduce students to respected guest speakers, including officials from the Massachusetts Department of Environmental Protection. Ultimately, the program aims to train students to monitor the conditions in the wetlands with such accuracy that students can produce scientific data acceptable to professionals.

Already, Environmental Research students have explored the geography of Cohasset's watershed by building their own topographical models from foam core and plaster. Next, the students used acrylic paint to delineate Cohasset's marshes, beaches, and bodies of water and to differentiate between freshwater, saltwater and brackish areas. Understanding the town's drainage patterns is vital to the students' ability to track sources of pollution because they must judge where to conduct their water quality tests in order to infer the locations from which pollutants are emitted.

Also, the class has taken a field trip to the CSCR building on Parker Avenue to begin learning the science and lab procedures of water quality testing. There, the students received a tutorial from three MassDEP scientists: Chris Duerring, Joan Beskenis and Richard Chase. Through hands-on practice, students learned about various laboratory protocols including safety precautions, the avoidance of sample contamination and proper documentation techniques.

Training students to address imminent community issues, such as Cohasset's current flooding and pollution concerns, will serve to prepare youth to deal with far broader issues. As Mr. Buckley points out, "Local issues have parallels to global problems." Environmental Research will allow students to learn community lessons firsthand and to explore how the same issues can be monitored at the state and federal levels. By the course's conclusion, students will have a better understanding of their own personal obligations to the protection and maintenance of the watershed, as well as the governmental responsibilities on all levels for storm water regulation.

Training students to address imminent community issues, such as Cohasset's current flooding and pollution concerns, will serve to prepare youth to deal with far broader issues.



Environmental Research, 20 years in the making, brings science to life for Cohasset students. Now, scientific research is a community service, a link between public school students and the surrounding town. Thanks to the dedication and innovation of Mr. Magnussen and Mr. Buckley, students realize that their research can be highly valued and respected outside the classroom. At last, student work really matters. It has meaning.

Parting Reflections: special bond that will last forever

This is the fourth in a series.

ASP is the Cohasset Appalachian Service Project Group, 60 adult volunteer advisors and 130 high school student volunteers who, every summer, return to Kentucky, Tennessee and West Virginia to bring physical warmth, comfort and security to families in need by fixing their homes.

Months of preparation and fundraising culminates in a nine-day trip in late June. It's an arduous and emotional journey. The poverty is often overwhelming, the work hot and muscle-pounding, and often augmented by wasps and other critters. Days in buses and vans lead to nights on Aerobeds on school classroom floors.

The results are more than worth the enormous effort. The families are better off and so are Cohasset's youth. Recent studies have pointed to an increase in narcissistic kids. Not these kids. And the adult advisors are also beneficiaries – it is truly a rewarding experience for all. These are their final reflections:

"We accomplished our mission."

"We started the week as a crew of seven assigned ASP volunteers with a job to do. We accomplished our mission: underpin a trailer that an elderly couple lived in. Along the way we made a difference in two people's lives in Kentucky and we become seven friends that shared an experience together and have a special bond that will last forever." — Adult Advisor

"Whew! What a week. A week of ups and downs....but that is what ASP is about. The Initial disappointment of worse-than-imagined-1957-substandard living accommodations was forgotten soon when we completed our project to the family's complete satisfaction and joy. The look on their faces could not be described. Ya had to be there." —Adult Advisor

"I have gained a new appreciation of the human spirit and what a small sacrifice can do to help change and improve someone's life."
— Student Volunteer

Narcissistic Youth? Not Here.

"Wow, what a trip! I feel lucky to have been in a center [there are four, each in a different location] with such amazing people. Our work crew was especially impressive. At different times during this past week, I found myself noticing hard work, kindness, and generosity from each member. ASP sends me home with many thoughts. I love that the week was filled with connections and new friendships. I hate that it must occur amidst such poverty. I guess the trip's effect is twofold: it reaffirms the positive aspects of life, but reminds us of all what needs to be done in the world." — Student Volunteer

"ASP '06 was one of the most memorable and valuable weeks of my life. I have gained a new appreciation of the human spirit and what a small sacrifice can do to help change and improve someone's life." — Student Volunteer

"I'm so grateful to have been a part of this wonderful journey! I think we succeeded in bringing some light into the lives of the ASP family. I hope the generous spirit among all of us will carry forward into the community as we return home." — Student Volunteer

Mixed Emotions

"Today is the last leg of the trip home. While I'm excited to sleep in my own bed, shower in my own shower, and eat a fresh meal, I'm still really sad to leave this year." — Student Volunteer

"This week was so much fun. The feeling that I will have for the rest of the year is indescribable. ASP '06 has been such an amazing experience and I can't wait to come back next year. The funny van rides, hard work, and making new friends all made this experience so great. Thank you!" —Student Volunteer

Following the Paper Trail: Researching the Crew of the Portland

Walter Hickey, Archives Specialist at the National Archives Northeast Region in Waltham, has followed a paper trail of archival materials, including the deceased seaman's papers filed by the victims' families, to carefully identify the crew of the Portland. Join the Hull Lifesaving Museum at 1117 Nantasket Ave., in Hull, at 7 p.m., Thursday, May 3, to hear how dedicated research has helped to solve one of the steamer's many mysteries

The Portland, which was lost in the Portland Gale of 1989.

The devastating "Portland Gale" that struck New England Nov. 27, 1898, bears the name of the steamship Portland, which was wrecked as she attempted to make the return trip from Boston Harbor to Portland, Maine.

The Portland Gale devastated the Hull coast.

With all 192 passengers and crew tragically lost with the ship, the Portland is one of the worst disasters in New England maritime history. The location of the wreck had long been one of the great mysteries of Massachusetts Bay, until recent underwater archaeology efforts at the Stellwagen Bank National Marine Sanctuary revealed the wreck site. Sadly, much of the Portland's documentation went down with the ship, making the crew and passenger lists something of a mystery as well.

The cost is $3 for members and $5 for non-members. For information call 781-925-5433 or visit lifesavingmuseum @comcast.net.

"Automatic fire alarm activation responses totaled seventeen for the month. Accidental activation of the alarm system accounted for eight responses and alarm malfunction was the cause of nine responses," Silvia said.

There were three responses classed as building fires for the month, one was for a chimney fire and two were for malfunctioning electrical equipment. There was one response to a hazardous materials incident during the month. The response was for gasoline leaking from a motor vehicle.

"Five members of the Department received Incident Command training (ICS 300) during the month. The class was provided by MEMA and was hosted by the Town of Braintree LEPC. The three-day class is required for all members with supervisory duties. The costs for the class are being covered by a MEMA Grant," Silvia said.

'Teach us to number our days'

By Martha A. R. Bewick
SPECIAL TO THE JOURNAL

On April 12, Steven Weiss, Cantor of Hingham's Congregation Shar'aray Shalom, lifted his voice, and the hearts and souls of those attending Glastonbury Abbey's second-to-last lecture in the series "Listening to Other Voices." In the wake of the human tragedy at Virginia Tech that has brought heartbreak to the nation, Cantor Weiss's message "How the Soul is Elevated in Times of Crisis from Sadness to Joy" deepens understanding of how the spirit can move beyond mourning and grief through music.

Cantor Steven Weiss, accompanied by Eugene Kaminsky of the South Shore Conservatory, sings at Glastonbury Abbey during "A Sermon in Song: How the Soul is Elevated in Times of Crisis from Sadness to Joy."

Cantor Weiss was introduced by committee member Avis Goldstein, who said that one of the reasons she married her husband Hal was that he knew the melodies and prayers of their shared Jewish tradition. She felt a sense of comfort and security hearing him sing, which, she said, was "something more than just the memory of a childhood." Her introduction led us into the deep and rich prayer tradition of the Hebrew Psalms.

Accompanied by pianist Eugene Kaminsky of the South Shore Conservatory, Cantor Weiss set the audience within the spirit and inspiration in the sung Hebrew Psalms, in both ancient and contemporary melodic settings. "Psalms, and some of the music which stems from the time of Moses, work in many ways," he said; and added, "Illness, suffering and loss can mute us, and leave us unable to speak. Whenever we feel speechless, and feel that words fall flat, Psalms can give good ways of communicating."

As he sang, he noted that some of the Psalms ask forgiveness of God and some offer thanksgiving for divine intervention. Some ask for help. "Psalms express whatever is in our hearts," he said. "Each Psalm is a chapter," he observed, "where we can find answers for our days. They tell us how the saints of their day found their way through times when they were discouraged, or defeated or elated."

Cantor Weiss explained that the Psalms are threaded throughout Jewish liturgy and worship, and also sung during great festivals, such as Passover, Hanukkah and New Moon days. He described other ways that Psalms are used customarily. These include special prayers and events, such as for the health and safety of Israel, or for birthdays. There is a custom, he said, as you are looking forward to a birthday, of praying the Psalm for that birthday each day.

"I feel very touched by the feeling of oneness in the Hebrew prayer we have heard this evening."
— Father Timothy Joyce

He pointed out that a musical response to illness can be more natural than speech, and that music is the vehicle for expression "in calling out to God." The Cantor pointed out that two Psalms were named for their special healing of body and spirit, but that each of us must find our individual way into each psalm. He mentioned Psalm 90, "Teach us to number our days," and Psalm 69, which asks for God's kindness and deliverance for the one drowning and overcome with despair.

The singing of Psalms can bring visual personal pictures through words and melodies, said the Cantor, "so that each one of us can create a picture of loved ones, being lifted to a better place of complete healing." He mentioned Psalm 121, "I lift my eyes to the mountains, and see that help is coming," and added "Psalms sanctify our individual yearning."

As he sang Psalm 23, the most well-known of all Psalms, Cantor Weiss described the picture as "not only of a return to a pastoral state, but of a person cared for by God in a comforting setting." Everyone recited Psalm 23 and he sang the Psalm in Hebrew in his great baritone voice. The Cantor ended by describing the Psalms of praise, where we celebrate with joy. He said, as he concluded, "every single being is infused with God's soulfulness," and asked those attending to think of what connects each of us with that soulfulness.

Thanking him for his inspiration in word and song, Father Timothy Joyce, co-chairman of the lecture series at Glastonbury Abbey observed: "Psalms are the warp and woof of monastic life. To hear Psalms sung in Hebrew, the original language, was very moving. Psalms are our prayer, sung also by the early monks. Jesus prayed the Psalms – the Hillel Psalm. When Psalms become too common, and you don't hear the message, we are reminded that we are that people too. I feel very touched by the feeling of oneness in the Hebrew prayer we have heard this evening."

Cantor Weiss has been recorded on CDs, and is working on future recordings.

Now in its eighth year, "Listening to Other Voices" has brought speakers from the region and the country to Hingham. This year's lectures, designed around the theme, "The Fears that Bind Us," have featured participants from prison, AIDS and Roxbury ministries, as well as families affected by 9/11. The evening ended with some of Glastonbury Abbey's famous brownies, and an invitation to the final lecture.

The last lecture of the series will take place on May 3. Joyce Rain Anderson, a Wampanoag tribe member, poet, teacher and speaker, will talk about the importance of storytelling to the Native American and others.

Native American culture is topic in Abbey series

Glastonbury Abbey Inter-Religious Lecture Series, "Listening to Other Voices: the Fears that Bind Us," will present a talk by Joyce Rain Anderson titled "Story-Telling: A Way to Your True Self – For Native Americans and Others." The lecture will take place at 7:15 p.m., on Thursday, May 3, at Glastonbury Abbeys Conference Center.

What's it like to try to preserve the Native American culture in a society that may think about it only on Thanksgiving, if at all? Anderson will talk about how one survives, fights to keep an identity and spirituality and strives to keep fears for the future of her culture at bay.

Anderson, a Wampanoag tribe member, poet, teacher and speaker, will talk about the importance of story telling to the Native American and others.

Poet/teacher/ speaker Anderson, a specialist in the American Indian, has a doctorate degree in English and is a Wampanoag tribe member

'The Dancer's Life' a family affair

By R. Scottt Reedy
CORRESPONDENT

When Chita Rivera needed a dance captain for the national tour of "Chita Rivera: The Dancer's Life" - opening at Boston's Colonial Theatre next week - the Broadway legend looked no further than her own daughter, Lisa Mordente.

"This is a very different experience for me. I am usually the ingénue or the lead," explained the 49-year-old Mordente by telephone from a Palm Beach tour stop last week. "I wouldn't take this job on any other show, but I am enjoying this whole experience very much. My mother and I are incredibly close and this gives us a chance to spend quality time together."

And the opportunity for Mordente to make sure her 74-year-old mother is well taken care of on stage and off.

"It is my job to take care of the company, including my mother. I make sure everybody is in the right place. We're playing so many cities and there are always adjustments to be made to the specifics of each different theater. This is a musical piece, of course, and heavy on dancing, so I give notes as necessary and mention if something looks funny. If I see that one of the dancers is not on his or her mark, then we talk about it and straighten out the problem. I work closely with both of our stage managers to make sure that everything on stage is just right."

Chita Rivera on stage.

Lisa Mordente with her mother, Chita Rivera

With a Broadway career that includes nine Tony nominations and two wins as Best Actress in a Musical for "The Rink" and "Kiss of the Spiderwoman," Rivera has known what was right since her performance as Anita in the original Broadway production of "West Side Story" first made her a star in 1957. It was while appearing in the legendary Leonard Bernstein musical that Rivera met and married Mordente's father, Tony Mordente, a dancer and choreographer. The pair divorced in 1966, but remain committed to their daughter.

"Both my parents have the old-fashioned work ethic. You are a straight-through professional at all times. They both taught me that and also everything there is to know about discipline, manners and respect. You learn something from each and every experience you have in life. I've been watching my mother on stage and backstage since I was in a baby carriage. I learned from her, very early, that you have to have a life and not just a career.

Mom was always at home to cook the meals and check my homework, but when call time rolled around at 7:30 p.m., she was at the theater ready to go on. She has always been a kind of wonder woman and never a diva even for a minute. Mama taught me never to take myself too seriously and to always try to enjoy what I am doing."

For Mordente, the enjoyment of her own career in theater came early. When she was only 12, she earned her Equity card during nine months on the road with her mother in "Zorba." She also toured with Angela Lansbury in "Gypsy." She subsequently earned a Tony nomination for Best Actress in a Musical for "Marlowe," a musical set in 1593 that ran for just 40 performances.

In 1993, Mordente served as assistant to choreographer Wayne Cilento on the hit Broadway production of "The Who's Tommy." On television, Mordente was seen as Carmen Epstein on the 1970s sitcom "Welcome Back Kotter." Rivera's experiences include starring roles in a dozen Broadway musicals, many of which are chronicled in "The Dancer's Life," which features a book by four-time Tony Award winner Terrence McNally and choreography and direction by Graciela Daniele. Originally presented at San Diego's Old Globe Theatre, the musical celebration of Rivera's career ran on Broadway from December 2005 to February 2006.

"My mom is one of the last of the great, great legends of the Broadway stage. I have never seen another person just like her. In this show, she is living the experience of her life every night on stage, and it is my life, too, which makes it great for me," says Mordente, who is also a swing with the show, going on when one of the female dancers has to miss a performance. Her mother, of course, does not have an understudy.

"I have gone on with as little as one hour's notice. The whole company has been very supportive, because it is one thing to know the show as dance captain. It is another thing altogether to actually dance it. We have a good time, though, and we laugh hysterically even when things don't go exactly as they should. What makes it exciting is that Mama is so incredibly fabulous. She is amazing to work with. This is an experience that I would have been a fool to pass up."

("Chita Rivera: The Dancer's Life" will be at the Colonial Theatre, 106 Boylston St., Boston, May 1 through 6. For tickets and information, visit the box office, call 617-931-2787 or go online at broadwayacrossamerica .com)

BECAUSE YOU HAVE A TRUST... YOU MUST ATTEND THIS FREE WORKSHOP!!!

DENNIS B. SULLIVAN
ATTORNEY AT LAW, CPA

If you have a trust agreement, I have some bad news for you; your trust is probably outdated. Trusts drafted by many attorneys do not contain the protective provisions we included in our recently developed "Life Plan™". How do I know? Last year I gave numerous workshops throughout the state and will even offer $1,000 to anyone who can present an estate plan that contains all 19 of the protective provisions we currently use when designing a plan. Most estate plans had fewer than 3 of these provisions. Only one estate plan even came close to having all 19 provisions. Consider this...

THIS YEAR YOU ARE SIX TIMES MORE LIKELY TO BECOME DISABLED THAN DIE!

This alarming statistic shouldn't surprise you...you see it every day. Unfortunately, the number of people becoming disabled will double in the next decade. Your trust was designed to deal with death not disability, but that can be corrected.

A LAWSUIT IS FILED EVERY THIRTY SECONDS – MORE THAN 90 MILLION ARE FILED IN THE UNITED STATES EACH YEAR

Your trust can be modified to protect the surviving spouse's interest in the Decedent's estate from frivolous lawsuits. Currently, it is only designed to reduce estate taxes. Would you like it to do both?

MOST POWERS OF ATTORNEY ARE OUTDATED WHEN PRESENTED (MANY ARE NOT EVEN AVAILABLE)

Your Power of Attorney is used to allow someone to act on your behalf when you are disabled. Unfortunately, these documents keep becoming outdated. The comprehensive version we previously used was revised in 3 major areas after the Terri Schiavo case. Assuming your document is current, will it be available in an emergency? Hospitals report in 3 out of 4 cases the Patients' Health Care Proxy is not available when needed. Our new program makes this document accessible 24 hours a day, 7 days a week via the telephone.

IN 2001, MORE YOUNG PEOPLE FILED FOR BANKRUPTCY THAN GRADUATED FROM COLLEGE!

The amount of assets that will be inherited by the next generation is staggering. Unfortunately, the amount our children or beneficiaries will lose due to financial difficulties such as bankruptcy, lawsuits and divorce will be just as staggering. If you could distribute your estate in such a way as to protect your children or beneficiaries from their creditors for life... would you? I would be surprised if you said no. After all, isn't that why your trust was created in the first place?

MOST ESTATES DON'T MAKE IT TO THE GRANDCHILDREN!

If you can protect your estate during the life of your children, then it will be available for your grandchildren. Wouldn't it be nice if your estate, whatever is left, could then transfer estate tax free to your grandchildren? It can, we just need to put the appropriate language in the document.

THE BIGGEST THREAT TO YOUR ESTATE IS NO LONGER PROBATE & TAXES...

IT'S DISABILITY, OUTDATED DOCUMENTS UNPROTECTED DISTRIBUTIONS...

DUE TO RECENT CHANGES, YOUR LIVING TRUST COULD BECOME A LIVING HELL.

WE HAVE DEVELOPED A SOLUTION FOR EVERY PROBLEM!

ATTEND OUR FREE WORKSHOP

Call our office at 800-964-4295 to reserve seating for this important workshop. During this call we will inform you of the exact location of the workshop. At this workshop you will learn the details about your trust that perhaps your attorney never explained. We'll explain the new laws that directly affect your estate planning documents, and how to take steps to correct these problems. All those in attendance will receive a 19-point checklist for a "self analysis" of their estate planning documents. As a bonus, if you bring this advertisement to the workshop you will receive a FREE REPORT on the new (February 2006) Medicaid Laws. You will discover how to protect your home and assets from increasing medical and nursing home costs, taxes, and the costs and time delays of probate.

The first attendee who submits a disposable, non-returnable, copy of their estate planning documents that do not have any of the problems addressed in this article will receive $1,000! Bring your documents to the workshop for a complimentary 19 point written analysis.

YOU CANNOT STOP THE WORLD FROM CHANGING...BUT YOU CAN USE NEW TECHNIQUES TO PROTECT YOU AND YOUR LOVED ONES.

Don't wait until you actually have a problem before you deal with it. By waiting until the problem happens you typically can only minimize the damage, rather than prevent it. Let's prevent it! By attending this FREE workshop you will receive a 19-point review of your existing trust, or a review of your estate planning goals and help creating a personalized plan. We will tell you the areas of vulnerability your estate has and how to protect your assets.

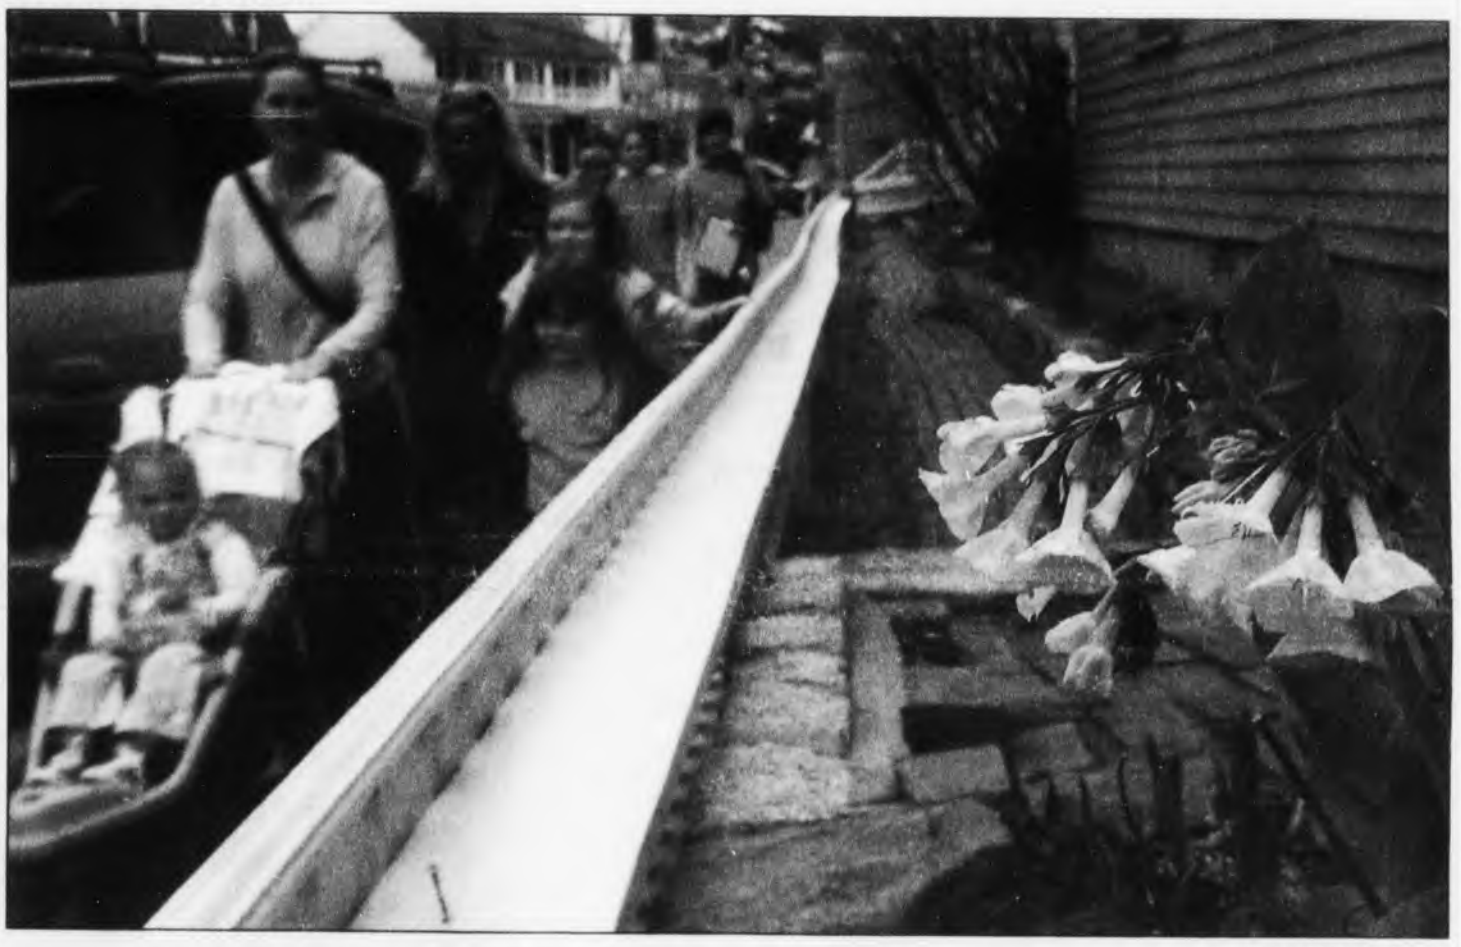
Planning Board to tackle Cook Estate

Hearings on proposed 'cluster' development begin next week

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

The Planning Board is slated to meet with the developers of the Cook Estate in the coming weeks to discuss the details of their application for a residential cluster development district. Developers from Abbott Real Estate and Development purchased the property, located off Sohier Street, and at their preliminary hearing back in January unveiled plans for a 27 home community.



The hearing, which was opened at the April 18 meeting, has been continued the last three weeks. Chairman Al Moore explained that the special permit the Abbott developers have applied for needs to have a "super majority," or four out of five members agreeing, according to town bylaws in order to be approved.

"We need a full board to hear testimony," Moore said in a phone interview.

Planning Board member Peter Pratt gave his resignation from his position last Friday. According to state law, a waiting period of one week is required after a resignation before appointing a new member. The Planning Board will attend Monday's Board of Selectmen's meeting to vote on the appointment. Moore indicated they intend to appoint former Planning Board member Bill Good, a real estate broker, to fill Pratt's seat until the next election. If there are

'He knew everyone in town'

Remembering Richard 'Dickie' Barrows

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

Richard "Dickie" Barrows was a "townie" in the best sense of the word. A lifelong resident of Cohasset, a 40-year veteran on the police force, and a 33-year member of the Recreation Commission, Barrows spent his life literally living and breathing Cohasset.

"He always looked out for the best interests of residents, he was unwavering in that," says Recreation Director Jack Worley. Thirty-two of Barrows 33 years on the Recreation Commission were spent as Chairman. He is one of the town's longest serving elected officials.

At the age of 81, Barrows passed away last Thursday (April 26). However, his legacy in the town will live on for years to come.

When Worley first got his job in 1976, he was given the ticket booth off the auditorium in the old part of Town Hall as his office. The tiny space had no furniture and no heat. Barrows, who Worley describes as "very resourceful," headed down to the dump to get Worley something he could write on.

"That furniture lasted us for 12 years," Worley says with a laugh.

Worley worked closely with Barrows for decades as they strived to bring Cohasset and its children recreational programs. An avid outdoorsman himself, Barrows wanted to make sure town lands were utilized for recreational purposes, says Worley.

"He was a good political buffer. He knew everyone in town," says Worley. One of Barrow's priorities as a Recreation Commissioner was to ensure that the programs were affordably priced so all could attend. Worley says he pushed for scholarships for kids so even struggling families could have the

The 18-hour training over three days gave the students the know-how and confidence to discuss diversity-related issues with middle school students. The idea is to promote an inclusive, respectful community.

The program involves a group of high school students who facilitate discussions in the middle school classrooms. The combination of the establishing a mentor-mentee relationship between middle school and high school students and the creating

POLICE/FIRE BEAT

Suspicious man at Sandy Beach sent on his way

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Police sent a suspicious man, who, as it turned out, has a criminal record, on his way after they received reports he had been in the Sandy Beach parking lot for hours last week.

The caller reported a white male in his 50s with long gray hair and who was in a maroon truck had been at the beach since 3 p.m. The concerned citizen made the call to police at 7:30 p.m. The caller also said the man may have yelled "hey kids" to some children.

"We checked on him and determined that he has a criminal record and told him to leave the area," Chief James Hussey said. The subject was from the western part of the state. "We have a log sheet on him, and the make and type of vehicle" should he turn up again, Hussey said.

Hussey said he was somewhat confrontational with police when approached.

Near accident

A Dorchester man is being summonsed to court to face charges of operating an uninsured and an unregistered motor vehicle following a "near accident" at the Beechwood/Route 3A intersection last week.

The Dorchester man was driving a black Mitsubishi on 3A when the operator of a green Ford traveling on Beechwood ran the red light nearly causing an accident.

Chief James Hussey said a police officer was monitoring traffic at that location at about 6:40 a.m. on Monday (April 23) and saw the near accident.

He said both cars pulled over. The driver of the Mitsubishi was able to produce a license but it turned out the car was not registered and was also uninsured, Hussey said.

The Mitsubishi was towed because it was unregistered and uninsured, and police gave the operator a ride to work.

The operator of the green Ford was cited for failure to stop for a red light.

Kayaks stolen

Police detectives are continuing to investigate a rash of stolen kayaks in Cohasset. They are working with other towns that have experienced similar thefts. Last week, police received two more reports. In both cases, residents were returning from vacation and discovered kayaks had been taken from their yards. One report came from Windy Hill Road and the other from Jerusalem Road.

"We checked on him and determined that he has a criminal record and told him to leave the area."
— Chief James Hussey

Police urge kayak owners to try to conceal the kayaks and secure them in some way.

Industrial accident

A worker operating an excavator was not seriously injured when the machine tipped over onto its side at a building site on Gammons Road last week. The incident occurred on Saturday (April 21), but was not reported until Monday (April 23).

Fire and police both responded to the scene. Fire Captain Paul Bilodeau said there was a small oil spill. He explained that it is standard operating procedure to call the Department of Environmental Protection in these situations.

Police Chief Hussey said the builder had booms around the site to protect against such an occurrence.

"The operator was able to fee himself and another worker drove him to the hospital to be checked out," Hussey said.

OSHA was also notified and came down to check things out, he said.

Credit report

An Ash Street resident reported to police last week that he noticed a $10 charge on his credit card bill that he was not responsible for. The charge was to obtain his credit report on line. Further investigation revealed the subject has a lot of the resident's personal information. Cohasset detectives are investigating the incident. Chief Hussey explained that identity thieves try to obtain credit reports to determine how much they can charge without causing alarm.

Boat mishap

Reports of flashlights shining and a truck doing donuts on Sandy Beach turned out to be a group of friends helping a boater whose boat was taking on water. Chief Hussey said the individual headed out from the ramp at Parker Avenue and boated over to Sandy Beach when he called friends after his boat started taking on water. "They brought a rope and pulled the boat out," he said. Hussey said the truck wheels may have been spinning in the sand and thus prompted the phone call from a concerned resident. The incident occurred after 9 p.m. on Monday (April 23).

Credit cards taken

A Cohasset mother contacted police last week after her son took her credit cards out of her pocketbook. Within a short time, police found the subject in the village and will be summonsing him to court on larceny charges, police said.

$400 stolen

A suspect is being summonsed to court to face charges of larceny over $250 after stealing $400 from a Cohasset resident. The suspect used the person's debit card. Police were able to identify the suspect with the help of the bank, Chief Hussey said.

Suspicious offer

Last week a concerned citizen contacted police after two males in a rusted, brown van pulled up and asked him if he wanted to buy a home entertainment system for $3,000. The caller did not get a good look at the driver but described the passenger as a Hispanic male with black hair and a round face. The call came in at about 4 p.m. on Tuesday (April 24). The caller said the incident occurred at Jerusalem Road and Atlantic Avenue and that the van took off toward Sandy Beach.

Police located the van that was parked illegally on Elm Street in the village. The officer approached the man behind the wheel who was not Hispanic. The officer questioned the driver and a computer check on him, there were no warrants being sought for him but he did have a criminal history, Chief Hussey said. Police did not come across the passenger who was no longer in the van. Police also looked through the vehicle and did not find any video equipment.

"We encourage people when they see a suspicious act to call us and give us as much information as they can," Hussey said.

Unlicensed

Police became suspicious of a car idling in the town parking lot for a period of time. The officer ran the plate through the computer, which revealed the owner had an expired license. The officer was also able to pull up a photo that matched the driver. The licensed had been expired for upwards of eight months, Chief Hussey said. The car was towed and the operator is being summonsed to court for unlicensed operation.

Bike switch

Police are investigating a report from a resident whose son's bicycle was stolen and replaced with another bike. Chief Hussey said the stolen bike is valued at about $70 and the one left in its place is worth about $50. "The one left was not a junk bike," he said. The incident was reported on Saturday (April 28). Police have spoken to the neighbors and searched the area and nothing has been found.

Stolen identity

A Rose Hill Lane resident told police he had received phone calls from a store stating someone was trying to set up an on-line gift account using his credit card and another call from Dell computer saying someone was attempting to use his credit card with Dell. Both the store and Dell turned the caller down.

The victim then determined that about $16,000 in fraudulent charges had been made to his account. The resident has torn up the credit card a while ago but had not closed the account. He had no idea who obtained his personal information and Social Security number.

Chief Hussey said credit card fraud and identity theft are fast-growing crimes. He said people should protect their Social Security numbers, bank account and credit card information, and shred receipts.

He explained today with online and telephone shopping no one has to match up a photograph or signature in order to accept a purchase.

Scituate fire

Cohasset provided mutual aid to a working fire on Garden Road in Scituate last week (Tuesday, April 24). Lt. Eric Winslow and firefighter Jay Fiori took Engine One to the fire. Hingham fire sent an engine to cover the Cohasset station, Capt. Paul Bilodeau said.

Electrical fire

A fire reported to be inside the walls to a home on White Head Road last Friday (April 27) turned out to be in the wires outside the house. Fire Capt. Paul Bilodeau said there was no damage. He said the fire department turned off the power inside the house. National Grid came to the scene and shut off the outside power until the repairs were made.

Turkey shoot

A motorist who wanted to shoot wild turkeys with his camera ended up stuck in the mud. The individual had permission to go up to the Graham Waste property off Route 3A to photograph the turkeys. As he was driving around, the tires got into a damp area. The property owner was able to pull the vehicle out, police said. The truck was not leaking and fuel and did not cause any environmental problems.

Hearings on proposed 'cluster' development begin next week

other candidates, they will be able to address both boards at the public meeting on Monday night.

"He's an experienced hand at this whole thing," says Moore. With a fifth member the Planning Board will be a full board and not be crippled if one member misses a hearing.

"We have some tough hearings breathing down," says Moore, indicating that Good's knowledge would be valuable addition to the board. In addition to the Cook Estate application, the Board is expecting another development application for the TOD (Transit-Oriented Development Overlay District) off Route 3A, near the MBTA train station.

At the preliminary hearing in January developers from Abbott discussed their initial plans for the 19-acre property, formerly owned by the late Jane Bancroft Cook. Their intent is to transform the property, which now has one single family home, into a 27-home community under the town's residential cluster development bylaw.

The residential cluster development district allows for homes to be built closer together with open space on the edges. Despite the "cluster" of homes, there will be no more units built than would be allowed under normal subdivision, says Moore.

Abbott Development has been in business for more than 11 years and has built more than 1,000 homes both for rent and for sale, including the recent Seton Highlands development at the Pinehills in Plymouth.

The Abbott developers proposed 27 single family, two-bedroom houses on the property. The houses will all be between 2,200 and 2,400 square feet and from the outside, their designs will be compatible. If all goes well with the permit, it is likely that they could begin construction as early as this summer.

Prices for the new units will be discussed with the Planning Board at the hearing; however, the units will not be deemed affordable by the state. Abbott will also provide detailed plans for the development to be analyzed by both the board and its consultant.

Abbott Development has been in business for more than 11 years and has built more than 1,000 homes both for rent and for sale, including the recent Seton Highlands development at the Pinehills in Plymouth. The active adult, 55-plus duplex-style condominium development has over 100 units.

Last fall, the Cook Estate development was proposed to be a 55-plus community as well. However, that restriction has since been shelved and the development will be open to all interested buyers. In addition, the development will feature detached homes, rather than duplex style.

This isn't the first time development was proposed on the Cook Estate property. The land was formerly under the auspices of the Town. At the November 2003 fall Special Town Meeting, voters authorized the town to spend $4.5 million for the purchase of the Cook property with the intention of combining the Cook land with adjacent town-owned land, and making a profit when the town sold both pieces to a developer. The town planned to have a developer build affordable senior housing on the combined property.

Wastewater issues first forced a reduction in scope for the project (originally proposed at 95 units), and then forced the project to fall through after several plans by four different developers. The land was returned to the heirs of the Cook estate and they hired Abbott Developers last summer.

The town land on Sohier Street adjacent to the Cook Estate that was intended to be used to develop senior affordable housing, roughly nine acres, is now under a conservation restriction imposed by the Board of Selectman in February.

The Planning Board will begin hearing testimony from the Abbott Developers on their plans for the Cook Estate this Wednesday night, May 9. The Planning Board will meet on consecutive weeks and the hearing will likely last several meetings.

For more information or meeting dates, please contact the Planning Board office at Town Hall at (781) 383-3517.

Sandy Beach sustains significant damage

The April Nor'easter caused downed power lines, higher than normal tides, high surf and closed roads. This storm left a path of destruction throughout town. No place is this destruction more obvious than at Sandy Beach. During the highest tides of that storm the surf broke over the rock wall barrier and into the parking lot leaving behind a parking lot and beach full of rocks, sea weedseaweed and garbage. The door to the bath housebathhouse was destroyed and the winter fencing was swept away.

During the highest tides of that storm the surf broke over the rock wall barrier and into the parking lot leaving behind a parking lot and beach full of rocks, seaweed and garbage.

Sandy Beach Association President Robin Lawrence states ""This storm caused more than normal winter damage to the beach and will require a larger and more expensive clean up than in years past," says. Sandy Beach Association President Robin Lawrence. " Until this clean-up occurs, the Association, recommends that you use extreme caution with your family and pets as there is dangerous flotsam and jetsam on the beach"".

Sandy Beach is managed by the Sandy Beach Association, a group of eight trustees who oversee the beach operations and staffing. The Association has scheduled Spring cleanup the second week of June and will be open for the season June 16, 2007.

Land Foundation maps future

Meets with abutters to discuss plans for 40 acres

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

"I am encouraged by members of the Cohasset Land Foundation, they are some of the finest representatives from the town."
— Osborne Ingram

The Cohasset Land Foundation met with residents to discuss future plans for close to 40 acres of land off Norman Todd Road. About 20 residents attended the meeting at the library to air their concerns and hear what the Cohasset Land Foundation (CLF) has in store for development and conservation.

To set the tone of the evening CLF Chairman Rick Swanborg made clear that the meeting was to be informal and encouraged the attendees to interrupt him with questions or concerns.

The CLF has negotiated a price tag of $1.25 million to purchase the 37.5 acres of land, a combination of wetlands, ledge and forest. The purchase and sale agreement is between CLF and current property owner Osborne "Ozzie" Ingram.

The land's designation as forestland places it under a Chapter 61 statute that granted the Town the right of first refusal. The Board of Selectmen waived that right at its March 5 meeting.

Swanborg began with an explanation of the CLF, its origin and purpose. The CLF was formed after the creation of the master plan. The master plan, as Swanborg explained, is a long-range forecast for the town. Cohasset's standing master plan was created in 1965, he said.

The master plan included a build-out analysis that looked at how many more houses could be built in the town under current bylaws. However, he said that the percentage could and would change over time due to 40B projects or new water treatment technology.

The CLF was created as a non-profit group that would look out for the environment and community development for the town. The foundation seeks out opportunities, purchase the land and "convert it into something they believe the town would like," Swanborg said.

The purchase of the Ingram property will be the CLF's first since its establishment in February 2004. It is modeled after a similar private organization in Lincoln, Mass. that has been able to make their state-mandated 40B quota, as well as save farms and wildlife areas, Swanborg said.

The bulk of questions and comments from the neighbors were driven by residents wanting assurance that a large development, like nearby Cedarmere, would not be allowed.

Wayne Sawchuk, member of the CLF, made a presentation that explained the group's plans for the property. He explained that the Ingram land was both a beautiful property and served as a sanctuary for wildlife, many of which have been displaced from the Cedarmere development off Beechwood Street.

The 37.5 acres of property will be subdivided. The majority of the property will be wildlife, or conservation land. It is the intent of the CLF to hand that portion, roughly 22 acres, over to another private organization Cohasset Conservation Trust. Part of the purchase and sale agreement stipulates that 50 percent of the land remains undeveloped and be a park named in Ingram's father's honor.

The Conservation Trust will hold the fee title and conservation restrictions to the land. That portion of the property will remain under Chapter 61, forest management plan as well.

Ingram Park will have trails and a small, gravel parking lot. The parking lot will be town-owned paid for through a $40,000 CPC allocation passed at the recent Town Meeting. The parking lot, at most four spaces, will be available for park access and winter ice skating at Meely's Pond.

"Our goal is to have a nature preserve that you can walk through," said Swanborg.

A small 5.5-acre portion of the property will remain under CLF's auspices to be used in the future for recreational, non-housing use yet to be determined. In the meantime, the CLF may use the property as collateral to fund another project in town.

The Vedanta Center will purchase 6.25 acres of the tract as a "buffer" to their current property. The spiritual center has been in Cohasset since 1929 and is welcoming to all beliefs. From the CLF's discussions with the Vedanta Center, members of the CLF have concluded that Vedanta has no intention of changing the landscape either by building a parking lot or a new structure.

There are three developable lots, averaging about 2.25 acres each, that the CLF will need to sell in order to fund the land purchase.

"We're not-for-profit, we want to preserve land and open space," said Frank Neer, a member of the CLF, "we're not developing the whole property, just enough to offset the cost of conservation."

In other words, by building on six acres the organization is preserving over 30 acres for open space.

Sawchuk discussed the three lots at length, going over the common driveway, the permit process, the septic system, fire access and hydrants.

There will be three public hearing in the coming months, Sawchuk said, one for septic system, one for the common driveway with the Planning Board and one with the Conservation Commission. The CLF will get the permits and put a package together to be sent to developers.

The purchase and sale agreement to the developer will contain a restriction for the building of three houses or less, Sawchuk said. It is the CLF's plan to apply for septic permits that will only allow for four bedrooms in each house. They plan to seek one developer who will build on all three lots.

"We'll have a little more control if one person is doing it," as opposed to three developers, one for each house Sawchuk said.

The purchase and sale agreement will be finalized in July.

"I am encouraged by members of the Cohasset Land Foundation," said Ingram, who sat in the audience, "they are some of the finest representatives from the town."

Planning Board vacancy to be filled

The appointment will need to be approved with a vote of the Board of Selectmen and the remaining members of the Planning Board.

The Planning Board is looking for a new member. Planning Board member Peter Pratt has resigned from his position due to personal and health reasons. The vacancy was posted on the town website this week and resumes from interested citizens will be accepted until today, Friday, May 4 at 1p.m.

The state statute requires a one-week notice from the time of resignation to appointing a new member. The appointment will need to be approved with a vote of the Board of Selectmen and the remaining members of the Planning Board. The appointee will serve on the Board until the 2008 town election. Then voters would elect a candidate to fill the remaining three years of Pratt's term, until 2011. The Boards will meet and decide the appointment on Monday, May 7 at 7:15p.m.

Cohasset woman directs music videos

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

The making of music videos was typically confined to sound stages in Los Angeles or the like but that may be changing. Music video production has made its way into cities and suburbs across the country — including Cohasset.

Contests that seek out amateur video directors to produce a music video have become more and more popular.

"It's a new phenomenon in rock bands," says Cohasset resident Derry Schwantner, who says a couple of country music artists have done it as well, "it's really a marketing ploy to get fans involved in the band."

But Schwantner isn't complaining. She has filmed three music videos for contests put on by internationally known bands. She was a finalist in two of those contests and the third has yet to announce a winner. Schwantner won a trip to LA and then to London for her entries — and got to meet some of the biggest names in rock music today.

Schwantner, a self-proclaimed huge rock music fan, made her first video in January to the band Incubus's song "Dig." While many of the entries has storylines centered on boyfriend and girlfriend characters, her video was about friendship.

She recruited her 13-year-old daughter and her friends to appear in the video. Enthusiastic actresses, a scenic location at Egypt Beach in Scituate and a unique take on the song propelled her to be one of the five finalists out of more than 100 entries.

She got the call that she was a finalist in the middle of February; she had just finished the video at the end of January. She was flown to LA for three days where she met the members of Incubus and "did lunch" with their manager, Steve Rennie. The video was shown on MTV as fans were asked to vote which video they liked best.

After that she had "the bug" as it goes in show business and wanted another opportunity to try her hand at music video direction. As fate would have it, "completely by accident" she says she stumbled upon another contest. The band Buckcherry, her "absolute favorite band in the world," announced that they too were having a fan video contest for their latest single, "Everything."

Schwantner concocted a storyline about an obsessive Buckcherry fan who is on a quest to get a back tattoo that mirrors the one on lead singer Josh Todd's back. The video stars Cohasset residents Caitlin Sanchez and Chip Bolster and features the Teen Center and train tracks. She filmed and edited the video the first weekend in March. By the middle of that same month she was notified that she was the winner of the contest. Within two days she was flown to London where she saw Buckcherry in concert and met them backstage.

COURTESY PHOTOS

Derry Schwantner poses with Brandon Boyd, the lead singer of Incubus, for a post-concert picture in LA. Schwantner directed a music video for Incubus's song "Dig" and entered it into their video contest. As one of five finalists in the competition, she was flown to LA to meet the band.

"I did it for the challenge, but meeting the bands was a huge perk," Schwantner says with a smile.

Most recently she directed a video for the Red Hot Chili Peppers and their song "Charlie." Much of the music video was filmed on the Town Common and involved more than 40 Cohasset residents.

"The town is so great, so many people want to be a part of it," she says. She recruited several sets of Cohasset identical twins, including a pair of pugs, to be in the video.

Schwantner explained this video proved to be more of a challenge because she found it difficult to connect with the song. A member of the band indicated in an interview that the song was about imagination. Schwantner ran with that idea. The main character, "Charles," played by Charles Miller, lives a ho-hum life but in his dreams he transforms into famous Charlies: Charlie Brown, Charlie (of the Chocolate Factory) and Charlie Chaplin, to name a few.

This contest has garnered more than 400 entries, some from professional videographers. The large prize seems to have driven the high number of entries and attracted more professionals, Schwantner says. The prize is $5000 cash; a trip to Paris to meet the band and the winner's video will be the band's official video for the song.

"It's by far the biggest prize I've seen," Schwantner says. The winner has yet to be announced.

Schwantner got interested in making videos through her oldest son — "he's been making videos since the third grade." Now 19 years old, he attends film school and serves as her "long distance consultant" during music video production.

"I try not to take too much time out of my life," explains Schwantner who also is the technology teacher at the Osgood School. She sets aside one weekend to do both the filming and editing of the video, "because it could take over your life."

The editing process can be tedious and each minute of the end product is a result of hours of labor at the computer, she says. She uses her Mac and the program Final Cut Pro to edit the videos — the same program used by shows like "24."

"I like to come up with the idea and do the editing," she explains that being behind the camera isn't her favorite part of the process. However, she enjoys being able to take a project from conception to completion.

On the side, she has created other videos for weddings, anniversaries and local organizations. Annually she creates a "video yearbook" for Osgood that features the kids and different events throughout the year.

"My growth [in learning video production] has been based on what people needed," and asked her to do. She has learned different techniques and programs over the years to enhance the videos.

She doesn't know what will be her next project, but she's sure there will be another.

"Nothing beats making a music video," says Schwantner, "it's been the most creatively fulfilling experience."

All three of Schwantner's music videos can be viewed on You Tube. visit http://www.youtube.com/tekkteech

On the set of her latest music video, Derry Schwantner describes how she directed her cast during the filming of the video. Her video for the Red Hot Chili Peppers' song "Charlie" included over 40 Cohasset residents and featured the Town Common throughout.

Derry Schwantner reviews the last take of her music video. She filmed her latest video largely on the Town Common. Actor Charles Miller takes his place before the next shot.

Smart comedy

Dave Ingber keeps audiences laughing

Starts 'Stand Up' club at Harvard

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

Harvard students are smart, that's an indisputable fact — but are they funny enough to make an entire room full of people laugh at a single time?

David Ingber says yes. The Cohasset resident and Harvard senior is co-founder of the Harvard Comics Stand-Up Society (HCSUCS), a group of students who put on regular shows of various stand-up routines. This weekend in Cambridge, the Stand-Up Comics Society will take part in one of the nation's largest student performing arts festival — Arts First.

"We recently started gaining some notoriety on campus this year," Ingber says with a laugh. His group has been doing informal shows in dorms around campus for the last two years. In January, they completed the process of becoming an official Harvard club. With that esteemed title the group earned a slot in the Arts First festival along with the ability to reserve performance space and advertise to incoming freshman.

"Performing at Arts First is one of the great benefits of becoming an official club," says Ingber, although this will not be his first time appearing at Arts First. In previous years as a member of the all male a cappella group, the Din and Tonics, he sang in the festival.

Arts First was initiated by Harvard grad and actor John Lithgow in 1991. Last year, the festival featured over 200 concerts, theatricals, dance productions, and exhibitions of visual, multi-media and public art. All displays are by Harvard students and faculty — from classical music to video arts.

"It's really amazing how many performances and art installations there are," says Ingber, "it's unbelievable."

Together with Harvard junior, Harrison Greenbaum, Ingber started the club because there was no outlet on campus for this specific skill and talent. Their idea has caught on and other Boston area schools, like Tufts University, are starting their own clubs.

Right now, HCSUCS has about 10 stand-up comics who regularly perform, and four or five of the most experienced performers will tote out their best five minutes of material for the Arts First performance. The stand-up comics will deliver their comedy routines "rapid fire" to optimize their 20-minute time slot. HCSUCS is slated to begin their performance at 2 p.m. on Saturday, May 5 at Cambridge Queen's Head.

"It's going to be a completely new crowd for us," explains Ingber who is used to making his peers at Harvard laugh. Now, he has to appeal to a slightly older audience removed from a campus lifestyle. He says many alumni and area residents come out to the event. Organizers are expecting around 15,000 people to attend the festival, which began yesterday, May 3 and continues until Sunday, May 6.

Cohasset resident David Ingber offers his material to a Tufts University audience recently. The Harvard Comics Stand-Up Society has gained notoriety on the Harvard campus and off in the last few months.

"Plenty of our material is Harvard-centric; the first rule of comedy is to make sure you know your audience," he says, "but that doesn't mean we aren't thrilled about performing for people with a totally different frame of reference."

Ingber says much of his inspiration comes from the silliness in everyday life. Ingber has material that points out the absurdity of the annual Harvard versus Yale football game.

"It's like determining the playmate of the year with a philosophy test," he jokes.

The club holds workshops where the comics can preview their material to see if it will fly in front of an audience. They determine if a joke works, but just needs a little tweaking or if it just falls flat.

"I look back on the last few years and I'm happy with the way it turned out," says Ingber, who only wished he had begun the Stand-Up group earlier in his collegiate years.

"Hopefully it will be a good legacy to leave behind."

The 2003 Cohasset High School graduate is aiming to take New York — and show business — by storm this summer when he heads to the Big Apple to try to his talents out in comedy, acting and writing.

"Hopefully a billionaire will show up at Arts First weekend and say 'hey David, you are very funny, here's several million dollars so that you can pursue a career in this without having to worry about paying bills.' This type of thing is very rare. It has only happened to me twice."

Of course, he's kidding.

Ingber is an English concentrator who has been involved in performing throughout his Harvard career. In addition to the Din and Tonics, he has acted in the annual Hasty Pudding Show and performed in various campus plays and musicals.

He's looking forward to coming home to Cohasset after graduation and spending part of the summer in his hometown — before "starting his adult life," he says.

For a complete schedule of Arts First events, visit www.fas.harvard.edu/arts or call 617.495.8676. Most events are open to the public and free.

David Ingber, far right, performs with the Harvard all male a cappella group the Din and Tonics. A performer by nature, Ingber co-founded the Harvard Comics Stand-Up Society to hone his comedic skills. He, along with other Harvard comics, will perform this weekend at the Arts First festival in Cambridge.

'He knew everyone in town'

benefit of the recreation programs.

"Every summer cookout, every Easter egg hunt he was there volunteering his time," says Recreation Commission member Ted Carroll.

Both Worley and Carroll recall Barrows' meetings as informal enough to encourage discussion but strictly by the book. They both say that he had "Robert's Rules of Order," the book of guidelines on how to run a meeting, memorized.

"He always fought in the best interests of residents and the kids, he never had a personal agenda," says Carroll. "Thirty-three years on the Recreation board constitutes legend status."

A lover of town politics, Barrows was also a member of the Hagerty Committee and the Government Island Committee during this lifetime.

Before ever running for Recreation Commission, Barrows was sergeant on the Cohasset Police and a veteran of World War II.

Barrows joined the Navy after graduating from Cohasset High School and was sent to the Pacific ring for duty during World War II. He was stationed on the USS Missouri when the Japanese surrendered. When he returned from the war, he became a police officer in Cohasset.

A clown brings balloons to then Sgt. Richard Barrows at the police department. The occasion was Barrows' 60th birthday.

"He was always proud of his military service," says Former Police Chief Brian Noonan who worked with Barrows for 16 years on the Cohasset Police force. When Noonan first started he and Barrows patrolled during the midnight shift.

"He had already done half his career by the time I got on there," says Noonan. Barrows and Noonan were sergeants in the Police Department until Barrows retired in 1990 after 40 years.

"He was an honest but tough cop. He never swayed from doing the right thing," Noonan attests. He explained Barrows had an affinity for kids and at every chance he got he tried to point them in the right direction. He would give kids the benefit of the doubt, often giving them first and sometimes second chances, Noonan says.

Noonan remembers a story told to him years after it happened, but he says it speaks to the kind of man Barrows was.

When Barrows was still a young cop, he came to the aid of a Cohasset resident that had been accidentally shot while hunting in Maine. Bill Mason, a banker, found himself in a Maine hospital in serious condition and not receiving the kind of medical care he could get at a Boston hospital.

Barrows and another officer drove up to Maine in an ambulance and brought Mason back to better care — and proximity to his family and hometown.

"They picked him up on his own time," says Noonan, "he was an honorable man."

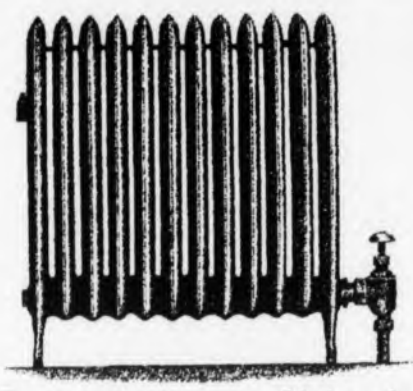
Barrows leaves his four children and nine grandchildren, all of whom live in Cohasset.

In Memory of Richard P. Barrow

Chairman, Cohasset Recreation Commission
1975 - 2007

From our first hand shake during October 1976, I knew that before me stood a man of principle, integrity and honor, a gentleman with whom the best interests of the residents of Cohasset always came first, an individual who knew Cohasset and most everyone living in Cohasset.

During the next 32 years I considered it a privilege to have as Chairman of the Recreation Commission, Richard P. Barrow.



Dickie was an avid outdoorsman, veteran of World War II, father, and eventually grandfather. Dick was Chairman of the Recreation Commission for 32 years and a Cohasset Police Officer for well over 40 years. Dick knew as much about Cohasset and the good people of Cohasset than anyone else I have ever known. Dick has given to Cohasset and the Recreation Commission up until his final days.

It is with out deepest sympathy to his family and all of Cohasset that the passing of Chairman Richard P. Barrow must be noted.

As your advocate, your best interests came first and foremost with Dick. He served his country and community with unbounded energy and integrity throughout his adult life.

We all owe our gratitude to Dick for his decades of selfless service on our behalf. Your best interests were well served and well represented.

— John M. Worley,
Director
Cohasset Recreation Commission

Garden Friends Plant Sale

The annual Garden Friends Plant Sale of the Community Garden Club of Cohasset will be held at the Cohasset Historical Society, 106 South Main St., on Saturday, May 19, from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. There will be a wide selection of annuals, perennials and shrubs for sale. Most of the plants are ones that members have successfully grown in their own gardens. Also available are herbal products from The HERB FARMacy of Salisbury, Mass and copies of The Eclectic Gardener, a handbook for gardeners written by CGCC members and filled with gardening and lawn care information, floral arrangement ideas, seasonal recipes and suggestions for nature walks. This would be a perfect gift for any gardener-new or old. Proceeds from the sale help fund the scholarship and community projects sponsored by the CGCC.

Glastonbury Abbey to host plant sale

A plant sale will take place 8:30 a.m. to noon, on Saturday, May 12, at Glastonbury Abbey. A large selection of plants will be available for sale on the grounds of the Abbey, 16 Hull St., Route 228, Hingham. Perennials, herbs, groundcover, ornamental grasses, small bushes, fruit and vegetable plants will be for sale.

Plants are being donated from local private gardens in the South Shore area. Many plants will be divisions of specimens grown in the Abbey gardens. Seedlings to mature plants will be available to tempt local gardeners who attend the sale.

Proceeds will go to the Benedictine Monks of Glastonbury Abbey and are used to continue beautifications of the Abbey grounds. Rain date is May 19.

DENNIS B. SULLIVAN
ATTORNEY AT LAW, CPA

BECAUSE YOU HAVE A TRUST... YOU MUST ATTEND THIS FREE WORKSHOP!!!

MOST POWERS OF ATTORNEY ARE OUTDATED WHEN PRESENTED (MANY ARE NOT EVEN AVAILABLE)

Your Power of Attorney is used to allow someone to act on your behalf when you are disabled. Unfortunately, these documents keep becoming outdated. The comprehensive version we previously used was revised in 3 major areas after the Terri Schiavo case. Assuming your document is current, will it be available in an emergency? Hospitals report in 3 out of 4 cases the Patients' Health Care Proxy is not available when needed. Our new program makes this document accessible 24 hours a day, 7 days a week via the telephone.

MOST ESTATES DON'T MAKE IT TO THE GRANDCHILDREN!

If you can protect your estate during the life of your children, then it will be available for your grandchildren. Wouldn't it be nice if your estate, whatever is left, could then transfer estate tax free to your grandchildren? It can, we just need to put the appropriate language in the document.

THE BIGGEST THREAT TO YOUR ESTATE IS NO LONGER PROBATE & TAXES...

IT'S DISABILITY, OUTDATED DOCUMENTS UNPROTECTED DISTRIBUTIONS...

DUE TO RECENT CHANGES, YOUR LIVING TRUST COULD BECOME A LIVING HELL.

If you have a trust agreement, I have some bad news for you; your trust is probably outdated. Trusts drafted by many attorneys do not contain the protective provisions we included in our recently developed "Life Plan™". How do I know? Last year I gave numerous workshops throughout the state and will even offer $1,000 to anyone who can present an estate plan that contains all 19 of the protective provisions we currently use when designing a plan. Most estate plans had fewer than 3 of these provisions. Only one estate plan even came close to having all 19 provisions. Consider this...

THIS YEAR YOU ARE SIX TIMES MORE LIKELY TO BECOME DISABLED THAN DIE!

This alarming statistic shouldn't surprise you...you see it every day. Unfortunately, the number of people becoming disabled will double in the next decade. Your trust was designed to deal with death not disability, but that can be corrected.

A LAWSUIT IS FILED EVERY THIRTY SECONDS – MORE THAN 90 MILLION ARE FILED IN THE UNITED STATES EACH YEAR

Your trust can be modified to protect the surviving spouse's interest in the Decedent's estate from frivolous lawsuits. Currently, it is only designed to reduce estate taxes. Would you like it to do both?

IN 2001, MORE YOUNG PEOPLE FILED FOR BANKRUPTCY THAN GRADUATED FROM COLLEGE!

The amount of assets that will be inherited by the next generation is staggering. Unfortunately, the amount our children or beneficiaries will lose due to financial difficulties such as bankruptcy, lawsuits and divorce will be just as staggering. If you could distribute your estate in such a way as to protect your children or beneficiaries from their creditors for life... would you? I would be surprised if you said no. After all, isn't that why your trust was created in the first place?

WE HAVE DEVELOPED A SOLUTION FOR EVERY PROBLEM!

ATTEND OUR FREE WORKSHOP

Call our office at 800-964-4295 to reserve seating for this important workshop. During this call we will inform you of the exact location of the workshop. At this workshop you will learn the details about your trust that perhaps your attorney never explained. We'll explain the new laws that directly affect your estate planning documents, and how to take steps to correct these problems. All those in attendance will receive a 19-point checklist for a "self analysis" of their estate planning documents. As a bonus, if you bring this advertisement to the workshop you will receive a FREE REPORT on the new (February 2006) Medicaid Laws. You will discover how to protect your home and assets from increasing medical and nursing home costs, taxes, and the costs and time delays of probate.

YOU CANNOT STOP THE WORLD FROM CHANGING...BUT YOU CAN USE NEW TECHNIQUES TO PROTECT YOU AND YOUR LOVED ONES.

Don't wait until you actually have a problem before you deal with it. By waiting until the problem happens you typically can only minimize the damage, rather than prevent it. Let's prevent it! By attending this FREE workshop you will receive a 19-point review of your existing trust, or a review of your estate planning goals and help creating a personalized plan. We will tell you the areas of vulnerability your estate has and how to protect your assets.

Beware of identity theft

Anyone of any age or income can be the target of identity thieves.

A senior citizen on Social Security and a bank vice president are both just as attractive to hungry hi-tech con artists.

Today's scammers are shrewd, using stolen credit card information, the Internet, and computer technology to cheat their victims.

"You need to be stingy about giving your personal financial information," South Shore Cooperative Bank Vice-President Susan Setterland told a recent gathering.

Identity theft is filching someone's personal information, such as a Social Security number or credit card number, to steal the person's money.

The Federal Trade Commission estimates that 9 million Americans have their identities stolen each year.

The Federal Trade Commission estimates that 9 million Americans have their identities stolen each year. Setterland was one those millions of people, as was the Cohasset editor.

In fact, on average one or two Cohasset residents report some kind of identity theft that results in credit card fraud to the police every week.

An identity thief in Florida got hold of Setterland's Mastercard number two years ago and charged several hundred dollars worth of goods.

An identity thief operating out of Minnesota took the editor's Mastercard number and charged $1400 worth of items over a 48-hour period.

Police said just this past week a Cohasset resident believes $16,000 in fraudulent charges were made to his credit card account. Another resident discovered someone had tried to obtain a copy of his credit report.

According to the FTC, skilled identity thieves may use a variety of methods to get hold of your information, including:

Dumpster Diving. They rummage through trash looking for bills or other paper with your personal information on it.

Skimming. They steal credit/debit card numbers by using a special storage device when processing your card.

Phishing. They pretend to be financial institutions or companies and send spam or pop-up messages to get you to reveal your personal information.

Changing Your Address. They divert your billing statements to another location by completing a change of address form.

Old-Fashioned Stealing. They steal wallets and purses; mail, including bank and credit card statements; pre-approved credit offers; and new checks or tax information. They steal personnel records, or bribe employees who have access.

Pretexting. They use false pretenses to obtain your personal information from financial institutions, telephone companies, and other sources.

People should regularly review their financial records and report discrepancies to their bank or credit card company.

For more about identity theft and what you can do about it, visit www.ftc.gov

Spring into a healthy lawn

COMMENTARY

SANDRA DURANT

It seems that everywhere we turn, we are reminded that our environment is at a critical juncture. The question is how we can easily incorporate ecologically responsible living into our lifestyle. One simple answer is in choosing organic fertilizers over synthetic ones. Think about this: the natural gas used to create about 200 bags of synthetic fertilizer could heat the average home for a year. When we consider the fact that the aggregate American lawn is approximately 30 million acres of homeowner turf, we realize what an enormous impact the simple switch to organic fertilizers would have on the environment. Another fact: a gasoline-powered lawnmower can produce, in one hour, as much pollution as a car driven for 350 miles. Simply following the good healthy lawn practice of setting your mower blade to cut at 3 inches saves gasoline by reducing the need to mow as often.

So for those of us who are ready to take a few more simple but important steps, here is an updated reprint of last fall's popular healthy lawn article with new sources for fertilizers, soil additives, and weed control. Please remember to call ahead for availability of products listed in the resource section below. The best and most popular products can disappear quickly. Now that landscapers have discovered them, these products are purchased by the pallet load.

Top dressing — Most importantly, create a healthy environment and bring back the life: test your soil, balance its acidity, and add nutrient rich topsoil by top dressing and raking in an inch of balanced, nutritious compost each spring and fall. Use organic, slow-release, water-insoluble fertilizers that can be broken down and naturally fed to grass plants. Reintroduce Nematodes, microscopic worm-like animals that cause disease in insects, particularly white grubs, sod webworms, and chinch bugs. In cool weather, spring and fall, add grass seed mixes that naturally crowd out unwanted weeds and don't need endless watering. To speed up the soil building process, you may want to add microbial inoculants or additives, "good" bacteria and fungi that support beneficial microbes and earthworms.

Mowing — When you mow, set your blade height at 3 inches as taller grass will crowd out weeds, shade its own roots and better withstand drought conditions. Leave the lawn clippings as they return nutrients to the soil. Clippings do not create thatch buildup unless you over-water causing clippings to rot instead of breaking down naturally. In the fall, mowing leaves with mulching blades and leaving the chopped leaves on the lawn will cut fertilizer need by 50 percent.

Watering —You can water less if you water more deeply and in the early morning. Depending on rainfall, healthy lawns need 1 to 1 1/2 inches, collected water under the sprinkler, of overhead watering once a week if there has not been an inch of rain within the past seven days.

Fertilizer — If you want to give your lawn an extra boost of fertilizer in the spring and fall, choose a low nitrogen organic fertilizer with an NPK (nitrogen-phosphorous-potassium) ratio of approximately 3-1-2. Never use more than one pound per 1,000 square feet.

Grass plants — For a truly carefree lawn, plant a superior variety of hard fescue (Festuca longifolia) such as Nordic, Discovery or Oxford, which are bred from grass plants that survive without pampering. It is recommended that you mix fescues with perennial rye grass (avoid annual rye grass) and Dutch white clover and some bluegrass seeds for superior vigor, as well as insect and drought resistance. These mixtures are readily available. For the first few years, re-seed annually. Cost? Seeds of premium species and cultivars are worth the extra cost as bargain seed mixes are often adulterated with weed seed.

Weeding — Digging out weeds is best, but remember to fill the hole you have created with some compost (if the area is large) and grass seed. Keep moist until grass sprouts. Weeds will return only if their seeds are the only ones available to fill empty areas. For spot weed control, use vinegar or a citrus-oil-based herbicide and for larger areas use an organic corn-gluten product that prevents weed seeds from germinating.

Compost caution — Now, a few words of caution. Compost is turning into a big and, as yet, unregulated business. Unfortunately, there are companies processing waste into compost without regard for what pathogens, microelements and major elements might be carried into the material. Such compost can be full of the pathogen e.coli, contain too much nitrogen that helps pathogens increase rapidly or have high levels of microelements like lead and cadmium. It is best to know where the compost came from and what's in it if at all possible.

Lead zone — And remember, here in New England there is a lead zone around all older homes and buildings. Small pieces of paint containing lead land in the soil from deterioration and when old paint is scraped away. Never plant edible food within the 10 to 15 foot "lead zone" of a building. If you live in an older home and want herbs beside your doorstep, plant them in containers.

Now for some excellent resources:

Web sites:

• North and South River Watershed Association, NSRWA at Greenscapes.org. Their Greenscapes program has excellent information on creating beautiful low-maintenance lawns that protect our environment while saving time and money. They also offer a free workshop series for citizens of Cohasset. For information, call 781-659-8168.

• Grass Roots Healthy Lawn Program at ghlp.org. This is an excellent Web site that covers everything you need to know concisely and easily. It also has a great deal of information on children and pets, and their environmental exposure to chemicals. A must for parents.

• American Public Information on the Environment (American PIE) at americanpie .com. This site is a good educational resource on toxins in the environment and alternative solutions. They also have an environmental help line delivered in a neighbor-to-neighbor style. Call 800-320-2743 for information.

Books:

• "Soil Biology Primer" by Elaine R. Ingham, et al. This book offers a good introduction with close-up photographs of fungi, amoebas, tiger beetles and other inhabitants of the soil. Cost is $13 plus $5 shipping, at swcs.org or 800-843-7645, ext. 10.

• The Organic Lawn Care Manual by Paul Tukey, This book provides sound advice with more than 150 photographs and nearly 300 pages. It is an extensive guide to natural lawn care. Cost is $19.95 plus $5.00 shipping. Visit safelawns.org for information.

Compost:

• Greenleaf Composting 179 Boylston St., Jamaica Plain MA 02130, 617-522-4477. They will deliver or you can bring a bucket.

• The Vermont Composting Co., in Montpelier, makes organic compost from cow, horse and hen manure, as well as from leaves, straw, dairy waste and other sources. Though primarily wholesale, it also sells to individuals at slightly higher prices. Web site: vermont-compost.com or call 802-223-6049.

• Kennebunk Blend Ultra-light Compost produced by Coast of Maine is a dry, finely textured compost with the look of dark brown coffee grounds. It weighs half as much as regular (moist) compost. Made from composted hen manure, it's easy to apply lawn and garden top-dressing. Available at The Bloomin' Place in Scituate. Web site at coastofmaine.com.

Soil Test:

Fitts Mill, also in Scituate, is a good local source for the seed discussed in this article. In addition, their pasture mix will produce excellent results and is a less complicated solution. The nice thing about Fitts Mill is that you can scoop just what you need from a bucket rather than buying a bag. If you tell them how much area you want to cover, they will tell you how much to buy.

Paving to start once poles moved

MAKING TRACKS

TOM GRUBER & MARK BRENNAN

Spring and Pond Street happenings – Early this week the MBTA's contractor, CBB, approached us to say that they needed to close the Spring Street crossing at the skating pond for two days this week. Apparently, the tracks have not been set at the proper height and must be raised. If you were around when CBB originally adjusted the rail position, you may remember the gigantic machine that lifted the rails and tamped new ballast stone under the rails to adjust them. That machine was to have been available to CBB only for a limited time.

However, as it turned out, after preliminary arrangements for closure had been made with the safety forces and the school buses, CBB found that the machine availability had a larger window and this work could wait until Pond Street reopens. So that's why you may have seen alerting message boards at the skating pond this week but no activity.

Speaking about Pond Street, the work there continues and the site is nearly ready for final paving. One of the impediments to the final finishing of Pond Street is the presence of two utility poles that are now smack-dab in the street. Even though we became accustomed to a pole in the street at Itchy's Corner in Scituate, we guess that's not too cool here. As soon as the utility companies tend to these poles paving should get started.

Sohier Street – CBB continues to work like busy beavers at Sohier Street. We had some concerns about the width of the sidewalk being installed. But, all is well that ends well and they will be the required 4-1/2 foot minimum width.

Lower King Street – More CBB busy bees are doing lots of work here. The supports for a new traffic light at King St./N. Main St./Forest Ave. are being constructed. The accompanying photo shows a truck-mounted auger drilling a hole for the base that will support one of the new traffic lights to be installed. Shortly, the posts will be erected and the traffic lights installed. The current raised median on King Street at this intersection will be replaced by a painted median. This is so the large trucks removing material from the transfer station can navigate around the corner.

Granite edged medians will be installed at the railroad crossing as will be a sidewalk from N. Main Street to Laugelle Lane, including a new pedestrian crossing at the tracks. This sidewalk will connect with the new sidewalk, which will be constructed by the Town this fall to the Cohasset Station. The cost for this new sidewalk to the station will be paid for from our recently awarded Transportation Oriented Development grant. The new sidewalk construction project must be coordinated with several other projects along Route 3A. So the exact construction timing is not yet finalized.

Fence Design Change — For the past 2-1/2 years the towns of Cohasset and Hingham have expressed concern to the MBTA that the fencing that they intended to provide in the village area was not as robust nor as historically accurate as it needed to be. The MBTA had provided pictures of the fence they intended to install to the Army Corps of Engineers (ACOE). (The reason they went to the ACOE is that they are the responsible organization to assure the design and construction integrity of the Greenbush as it passes through our historic Towns.) However, the pictures were not of good quality, and there was no description of the fence construction. It turned out that the MBTA intended to provide a commercial grade of hollow tubular steel fence with plastic caps.

Well, at the insistence of the ACOE, the MBTA this week has agreed to instruct CBB to provide solid all-steel welded fence in our village area. We believe that this material will stand the test of time substantially better that a hollow steel fence and will be a bit more historically correct.

Apologizing for past sins

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

Exactly one half of my ancestors, according to the family Bible, came from Scandinavia, which makes me a member of a society that is becoming less and less exclusive.

It's made up of people who have something to apologize for.

Now you may not think of a race of people who turn out those gorgeous blondes or whose strongest expression is "yumpin' yiminy," could do something so heinous as to require apology, and that stumped me for a while, too.

Then I stumbled on the History Channel while searching for a Shannon Tweed flick on Cinemax and learned how the Vikings, ancestors of all Scandinavians, looted and destroyed the monastery at Lindisfarne in the year 793 A.D.

Of course, after 1,214 years, it's difficult to determine who to apologize to, since the old monastery at Lindisfarne is probably a Holiday Inn or a Burger King by now. Maybe the monks at Glastonbury Abbey will accept my apology.

I bring this up because I note that the House and Senate of Alabama have just now gotten around to apologizing for slavery, joining Virginia, North Carolina, and Maryland in acknowledging that what was called the "peculiar institution" 150 years ago was wrong.

"An apology goes a long way," said Sen. Hank Sanders, who sponsored the Alabama resolution. As long as there are no preparations to go along with it.

Indeed, 2007 is becoming known as the Year of the Apology, what with the serial-apologizer Don Imus telling everyone he meets, including Al Sharpton, how sorry he is to have called the Rutgers women's basketball team "nappy-headed hos."

Sharpton himself can still become a member of the apologists club by saying he's sorry for the Tawana Brawley affair, and his fellow clergyman, Jesse Jackson, to my knowledge, has never apologized for calling New York "Hymietown."

Shinzo Abe, the prime minister of Japan, can't visit Washington without some Congressman demanding that Japan apologize for the "comfort women," the Chinese and Korean women who were forced to staff brothels for Japanese soldiers during World War II.

Congressman Mike Honda of California, who filed the resolution, has already been the recipient of a Congressional apology himself. As a boy, he was one of the Japanese-Americans who were interned in the early stages of World War II.

I was first sensitized to the coming apology boom a few years ago when I learned that the comedian Eddie Murphy felt called upon to apologize for a remark about AIDS made 15 years before when the disease had no name but was known only as "a rare pneumonia in five gay men."

"I was 21 years old and just a kid," he said. "I mentioned the possibility of AIDS being transmitted through kissing. I deeply regret any pain all this has caused."

I was so impressed by Murphy's courageous apology that I issued one of my own.

I was present in 1965 in the Men's Press Club in Toronto when someone told a Newfie joke.

Like how many Newfies does it take to screw in a light bulb?

I can't believe I allowed someone to slander a Newfoundlander like that in my presence without giving him a sound thrashing.

For that I apologized.

Sharing some motorcycle memories

DRIVING WHILE TYPING

JOHN LENGYEL

Last weekend someone apparently came to our door wondering whether the motorcycle in the driveway was for sale. I say "apparently" because I was in the basement at the time, gluing together one of the 28 heirlooms my six-year-old had already managed to break that morning, and only heard about it from my wife later. I don't know what was more surprising, the idea that my ratty-looking '82 Honda could actually attract a prospective buyer or the fact that my wife hadn't accepted his first offer and handed him the key on the spot.

Although she spent hundreds of hours on that motorcycle during the first phase of our relationship she refused to ride once we had children, for the same reason you never put the President and the Vice President on the same motorcycle, even for the White House Christmas card. On top of that she just doesn't form sentimental attachments to things. Beloved toys, books, and pets routinely disappear from our house, triggering paranoia whenever something goes out of sight for more than a minute.

"Mom, did you throw out my math book?!"

"Of course not. It's probably on your chair under your coat."

"Oh yeah... Wait a minute. Where has my chair gone?!"

"It's behind the kitchen table, silly."

"Right, right. Sorry. I guess I haven't gotten over the time you tried to throw out the doll Grampa gave me."

"Yes, well I've been meaning to tell you, honey, Grampa hadn't worked in years and he was getting really dusty—"

"Mom!?"

As vehicles go, motorcycles have never been the safest option, but these days they look practically suicidal compared to cars and trucks jammed with enough air bags to survive a reentry from orbit. They're not as deadly as they look, but the fact is that no male under the age of 25 should go near a motorcycle. Until your testosterone levels fall into a measurable range and you've spent a good eight years witnessing the truly insane things people do on the road, you'd be wise to drive an Abrams Tank. Even simple bad luck with a motorcycle can turn a close call into a disaster. Late one night years ago I drove my car at 65 mph right over the separated tread from a huge truck tire. It whooshed under the car before I had time to even flinch, and I couldn't help thinking that had I been on two wheels instead of four, things would have gone very badly.

In my mid-20s I knew I couldn't wait any longer though. I had lusted after my cousin's minibike when I was 10 and the cravings had only gotten worse over time. So I paid $150 for an old motorcycle that wasn't even running, and pushed it for several miles to my rented cabin. I'd never had a proper appreciation for the gasoline engine until I pushed that 500-lb. motorcycle a quarter mile up an inclined dirt road, leaving a visible trail of sweat. But by the time I set it on its stand in front of my cabin I had bonded with that thing. A month later I had brought it back from the dead and the two of us were inseparable.

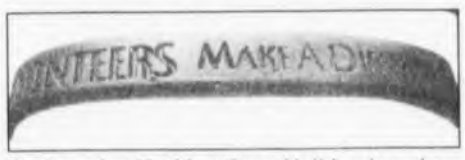
Why do some people love machines while others feel ambivalent toward them? I'm not sure, but I have a theory that some people need to be in love with something at all times, whether it has a heartbeat or not. I had recently been placed on permanent involuntary leave from a close human relationship when I met my first motorcycle, so it's no surprise that the act of fixing and maintaining this machine took on extra meaning. It was as much fun to ride as I had always dreamed, too — like flying a small airplane at three feet of altitude — and I learned for the first time what a joy just driving around for hours could be. A motorcycle even makes the daily commute something you look forward to, especially in California where it's legal to zip between the lanes of stalled traffic like a hot knife through butter.

A motorcycle sips gas while accelerating from zero to 60 in four seconds, making it the perfect ride for really cheap thrill-seekers like me. I miss my favorite passenger, though. Early one Saturday morning long ago we drove from San Francisco to Death Valley, touched the parched ground with our feet, and drove all the way back in time to get her to work Sunday evening. It was bliss, flying three feet above the road with her arms tight around me — a 900-mile hug. I want that weekend back some day. So for now I faithfully change the oil, keep the tires firm, lovingly tune the engine, and break the occasional heart with my "Not For Sale" sign.

John Lengyel lives in Cohasset. Every morning he whispers "Zoom Zoom" to his wife, but for 12 years now all it's gotten him is nookie.

HEALTH NOTES

Earth Day and thoughts on volunteerism



By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

For better or not, Earth day is over. The improbable 28 foot CO2 cube has disappeared from the Common and those who were inclined, picked up whatever trash they happened to see. It wasn't the event we saw last year. And, perhaps that's OK. Neatness and order can sometimes be a minor consideration amidst the chaos, which is manifest in our complicated world.

And, to some extent, cleanup is different from conservation and recycling — which is definitely a health matter — on both a large scale and small. A system of disposal, organizing and useful purpose for our discarded goods is at once a health matter and one of global concern. Somehow the use of an edible product, corn, to create an industry to help fuel our SUV's with ethanol when millions worldwide are facing starvation seems to be incongruous. Surely, to burn products in incinerators because their paint has lost its gloss, when those products could be gladly utilized in a less affluent society seems like a waste. Even more egregious and definitely a health matter is the improper disposal of dangerous substances such as mercury from fluorescent light bulbs and rechargeable batteries into our landfills and incinerators. The former is clearly a matter of economics, which seems to have a way of sorting things out. The latter is heedless and harmful tampering with the lives of future generations, which will have to find ways to lessen the effects of carelessly disposed toxics in our environment.

But perhaps, the most important element of the Earth Day story is what it says about volunteering. There weren't many people gathered about for the erection of the cube. It was who they were. Certainly the group at the Common last Sunday represented the backbone of those in Cohasset who facilitate and coordinate our large, widespread and efficient volunteer organizations, both formal and informal. In addition to the kids in their hard hats erecting the cube, there were maybe 30 people who gathered to observe, swap experiences and discuss their projects with others of like minds. There were teachers, nurses, administrators, board members of practically every volunteer group in town. It's hard to quantify the number of volunteers in Cohasset. One valued coordinator of volunteers recently moved into town, comparing her experience with that of the city she left, said she's had more volunteers at single meetings in Cohasset than the entire list of volunteers in the city she came from.

The Corporation for National and Community Service report, "Volunteering in America: 2007 State Trends and Rankings in Civic Life," www.nationalservice.gov provides a national, regional and state analysis of volunteering trends. The report, based on data from the Bureau of Labor Statistics' Current Population Survey, gives a detailed breakdown of America's volunteering demographics, habits and patterns by state and region. From this report we find that about a two-fifths of the population does some volunteer work. Massachusetts is near the middle of the ranking. Also, 89 percent of households give an average annual contribution for charities and other voluntary giving of $1,620. Forty-four percent of adults or 83.9 million American adults volunteer, representing the equivalent of over 9 million full-time employees at a value of $239 billion. About a quarter of Massachusetts college students volunteer as compared to Utah, the highest, with 55 percent. Massachusetts seems to have about average volunteer giving and civic responsibility (voting, attending public meetings, etc.)

The Board of Health at Town Hall has bracelets for volunteers.

About 10major volunteer organizations exist in Cohasset exclusive of churches, of which we have nine. Each organization has lists of volunteers. There is surely overlap and many volunteers are on several coordinators' lists. But Cohasset's 2600 odd households, with an average of slightly less than an three people each, probably supply 1,000 volunteers and about 150 public servants (those elected or appointed without pay). This number slightly exceeds the national average, but it seems to me that more than half of the people I meet are contributing their time to some endeavor for the Town. And the Town shows it; it's a pretty good place – thanks to its volunteers. So, if you're a volunteer, come by the BoH and pick up a bracelet.

Steve Bobo is a long-time member of the Cohasset Board of Health.

Lt. Gov. Tim Murray gives the keynote address at Law Day while Judge Patrick Hurley looks on. Murray said American citizens do not do enough to be proud of their justice system.

Law Day focuses on juvenile justice

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

The juvenile justice system could not have had better critics this year: kids themselves.

For Law Day — which is on May 1st — eighth graders from participating schools wrote essays on a 40-year-old case that wended its way to the Supreme Court. This year's theme for Law Day, which is celebrated in courthouses across the country, was "Liberty Under Law: Empowering Youth, Assuring Democracy."

The students who submitted essays to the Law Day contest researched the Gerald Francis Gault case that helped ensure that juveniles have rights when they find themselves facing criminal proceedings.

The issue, while complex, was ably tackled by eighth-graders from St. Paul School in Hingham and the Holy Family School in Rockland. The winners read their essays at Hingham District Court Tuesday before a courtroom audience packed with family, friends and a host of officials including, Lt. Gov. Tim Murray, and several judges.

The event would be enough to rattle the most confident speaker. But the first-, second- and third-place essay winners were prepared and read their well-researched papers with tremendous poise.

"Forty years have passed since the birth of American's modern youth justice system and as we reflect on this, the 'In Re Gault' case from 1967 serves as an example of choices and the history that resulted from them," read Emily Vitali of Rockland, whose essay won first place.

Emily explained that Gerald Gault, then 15, and his friend made "bad choices when they made prank phone calls to a woman."

The woman reported the calls to the police and Gerald found himself in a reform school. His parents were not notified of his arrest. The prosecution violated Gerald's other rights and ultimately the Supreme Court ruled that juveniles were entitled to due process.

Second-place winner, Andrew White, who is also a student at Holy Family, stated in his essay, "what was more horrifying was that until the Supreme Court overturned the decision, juveniles were denied due process."

In her essay, third-place winner Kate French of St. Paul School, stated "Gault was given a punishment worse than that which an adult would have been given."

And Ciara McManus, who tied for third place with classmate Kate, wrote, "I hope that this paper will influence others' opinions on crime and punishment in our state. Law Day is a great way for us to speak about the justice system's strengths and ways we can improve it.

"Hopefully we can make a difference in our country because of this."

Fifth-graders from participating schools entered the poster contest whose theme was to select a challenge facing young people and create a poster depicting this challenge.

First-place winner Caitlin Sugrue of the Esten School in Rockland, chose bullying for her poster.

"Big kids are bullying small kids, white kids are bullying African-American kids, African-American kids are bullying white kids.

"Kids usually bully those who are smaller, weaker and defenseless," Caitlin said when presenting her poster.

She illustrated the problem, the crossover to the solution, and the new beginnings where "everyone is giving each other compliments and getting along with one another."

Winners each received US Savings Bonds ranging from $50 to $500.

This year's Law Day was co-chaired by attorneys Heather Bradley and Scott Peterson. They took over the reins from Mary Amhrein, now a judge, who served as the chairman for 12 years. Amhrein, a Hingham resident, received the Liberty Bell Award during this year's celebration in recognition of her efforts.

"We are very grateful to Judge Amhrein for her guidance this year as we have tried to carry on this tradition," Bradley said. "As you can see it takes two of us to do what she did alone."

Lt. Gov. Murray told a story about when he was a student at St. John's High School and his government teacher asked the class where they had seen the words "Obedience to law is liberty." No one could answer.

As it turned out the words were etched in granite above the courthouse columns – the same courthouse the students passed every day on their way to school. "We talked about what those words mean," he recalled.

Murray said no other justice system in the world is like America's. He said the justice system tries to find non-violent solutions to difficult problems.

"We are a nation of laws, a commonwealth of laws," the said. "And we don't do enough to be proud of it."

Hingham Middle School student Kalli Jermyn sang the National Anthem and America the Beautiful for the Law Day celebration. Hans Dietterich of the Hingham Militia read President Bush's Law Day Proclamation.

Kate French of Cohasset reads her essay in front of a standing-room only crowd at Hingham District Court.

Justice is our collective responsibility

By Kate French

Editor's note: For the Law Day essay contest students were asked to research the United States Supreme Court case of In Re Gault and discuss one of the following: (1) Should the juvenile justice system focus on rehabilitation or punishment? (2) Should juveniles be prosecuted as adults?; or (3) Do you believe that conditions placed on juveniles by the court regarding school, work, home life are reasonable and appropriate? Kate tackled "prosecution for juveniles" in her essay.

...it is also the charge of the individual to learn about their rights and demand the fall protection of their rights.

When 15-year-old Arizonan Gerald Gault was sentenced to six years in the state industrial school for making several inappropriate phone calls, his family protested. Gault had been denied his due rights because he was a juvenile, and yet he was given a punishment worse than that which an adult would have been given. Though youth today no longer have this problem, thanks to Gault, other complications have arisen from the ashes of the original case.

Although juveniles have been granted the same constitutional rights as adults in a court of law, many people think that youth must also be prosecuted as adults. This controversy has raged since the Supreme Court's first decision, and continues on today. Some agree, some disagree, and all maintain the belief that theirs is the right ruling. However, it really is all contingent upon the circumstances of the crime.

There are several factors that must be taken into consideration before the court makes the decision on whether or not to try a minor as an adult. First of all, the delinquent's age must also be factored in. If the juvenile is still a child, then they must be tried as a juvenile, for they could not have comprehended their crime nor the gravity of it. Second, the crime and its seriousness must be reviewed. Should the offense be minor, then it is only fair that the defendant be tried as a juvenile. If, however, the crime is a heinous act, then there are still more aspects to be viewed. The person's mental state and health must be taken into question, or else the crime may not be the complete fault of the offender.

For instance, if a person were to be mentally handicapped, they could not understand the implications and consequences of their actions, and must be judged with that in mind. Again, if the defendant had a mental sickness, then they might not have been thinking clearly at the time of the offense. Although these circumstances may not provide immunity to punishment, they can certainly allow for the youth to be granted a lighter sentence and should be taken into deliberation.

On the other hand, should an adolescent commit an atrocity with complete knowledge of their act and with total malice and contempt of law and conduct, then it would be best if that youth were prosecuted as an adult. Contrary as this may be, this decision has sound logic behind it and certain conditions as well. The offender would have to have been aware of their crime and still acted on it, despite knowing that it was against the law. Also, the defendant would have to have been lucid at the time, and not affected by the delirium of insanity, mental disability, shellshock, etc.

Obviously, there can be no real conclusion to this ongoing battle, as both sides could easily be maintained from any viewpoint. These guidelines do help ensure that the most fair and reasonable trial possible is given. The ultimate decision, however, is in the hands of the court.

The juvenile justice system itself is sound, but there are, of course, a few minor adjustments that could be made. Although the law gives minors adequate protection and rights, it is not always carried out because of prejudice, grudges, and other personal feelings. Another problem is a lack of information. Sometimes a youth is mistreated, and nothing is done simply because the victim is not aware of their rights. Even in a court of law, a youth's right can be ignored, and the accused could not object or demand their rights through sheer ignorance.

This is a dilemma that begs to be corrected.

We can rectify the situation by educating students and teaching them their rights, but the responsibility does not solely belong to the school and government systems; it is also the charge of the individual to learn about their rights and demand the fall protection of their rights. Youth can then manipulate the full extent of their constitutional rights in order to obtain justice and vindication. All in all, if our judicial system is going to perform to the highest level, it is the responsibility of both citizens and officials to see that justice is carried out.

Kate French, an eighth-grader at St. Paul School in Hingham and a Cohasset resident, won third place at Law Day at Hingham District Court on Tuesay for her essay.

Peer leaders help confront diversity issues of an open forum for diversity issues are the strengths of the program.

"By working with and interacting with their older peers, we are optimistic that the middle school students will hear important messages relative to these topics and be inspired to model the proactive behaviors demonstrated by their high school counterparts," says Middle School Assistant Principal Beth McCoy. McCoy, along with teacher Stephanie Wooley, are the program advisors.

The use of games and skits to kick off discussions keeps the kids interested and involved. Already in more than 65 middle and high schools in the New England area, the workshop based program that expands both the facilitators and students' awareness of racial, ethnic, cultural and other individual differences is off to a strong start in Cohasset.

Interested high school students had to go through an application and interview process to be a part of the program; more than 60 students applied and only 32 were accepted. Each middle school homeroom has been assigned two peer leaders who will meet with those students a total of seven times this spring. The discussions progress from getting to know each other to bullying and prejudice.

"We paired them as much as possible based on strengths and weaknesses," says McCoy, "we tried to get it so it would be a good dynamic in the classroom."

High School students and Peer Leaders Anna Roberts and Alex Goetz were placed together in an eighth-grade homeroom. They both said the training was rigorous, but a learning experience.

"It was a preview of everything we're going to do," said Roberts, "it was educational."

Trainers of the Anti-Defamation League (ADL) came to the school to teach the high school students how to be a peer leader. The first two days of the training gave the students a chance to be a part of the workshop and participate in discussions and games. During the third training installment each student got a chance to present one part of the workshop — his or her first taste of being a peer leader.

"It's been getting better as we go along," said Goetz before heading off for his next meeting with the students, "once you get to know the kids it gets easier."

Forming a relationship and getting to know the middle schoolers is one of the primary goals of the program. The younger students look up to the older high school students for guidance and knowledge. Having a peer group go talk about bullying or showing them how to be more respectful of each other may resonate more because it's coming from a peer.

Goetz said one of the most memorable moments in the classroom was on the first session he and Roberts went around the classroom and asked the student to describe their experience that day in one word.

"They were all positive words," he said giving 'inspirational' as an example.

"The students have really gotten involved and got enthusiastic about it," Roberts said.

Last week's Peer Leadership session discussed biased humor and how everyone can be affected by it. The Mariner attended a classroom of eighth graders led by two sophomores: Megan Parnell and Maggie McGoldrick. The subject was introduced through a game called "Have you ever." Students were asked to stand if they had ever experienced the given question and then they switched seats with another student who was standing.

The peer leaders started with questions like "have you ever been out of the country" or "have you fallen asleep during a test." Then the questions turned to the topic of the day — biased humor. Have you ever hear a joke about people with Asian heritage? Have you ever heard a joke about blondes? Almost everyone stood up for each question that listed different heritages and social stereotypes.

The exercise, as the leaders went on to discuss with the class, show that there are jokes about all types of groups, some of which the students may belong to. Examples of biased humor on television and commercials were called out from the class, "everyone is affected by bias," Parnell said.

The game got the 20 students in the class interacting with the facilitators and each other. It opened the door for a discussion that may otherwise be awkward to work into the curriculum or normal conversation between friends.

Next, three students from the class were asked to participate in a skit. The skit depicted a girl being hurt by jokes another student was telling about her ethnicity, but she was hesitant to say something to him.

"People should try to say something, it's better to say something than let someone get hurt," said one of the students.

"Every person is different so you don't know if someone is going to be offended by a joke," said McGoldrick. The leaders explained that they need to have an awareness when they say something like a biased joke, even if they mean to be funny, it may have hurtful consequences to their listeners—even if they are just walking behind you.

The students and facilitators discussed the best ways to stand up to someone who was telling a biased joke. McGoldrick and Parnell encouraged the students to keep their comments simple and direct or to speak with the person when outside of the group. They said that your friends shouldn't be mad at you or stop being your friend over it.

"Don't stop being friends with someone just because your friends say you shouldn't—it's your relationship," added an eighth grader.

"Try not to say biased jokes and try to keep your friends from telling them," the leaders concluded from the exercise.

This session was just one in a series that will address a number of diversity-related issues.

"We are attempting to educate and open the minds of the younger students to important issues such as bullying, racism, and ostracism that often are overlooked when addressed by adults," says McCoy.

The program is in its first year at the Middle-High School and is supported through funding by the Cohasset Diversity Committee.

Girls tennis on a tear

By Mark Goodman
MGOODMAN@CNC.COM

The Cohasset High girls tennis team has cleared its most significant hurdle en route to once again claiming the South Shore League title.

In Monday's highly anticipated match at league rival Norwell, the Skippers pulled out a 3-2 victory. Cohasset followed that the next day with a doubleheader sweep of Duxbury (3-2) and Mashpee (4-1) to improve to 8-0 on the season.

Against the Clippers, the match was tied at 2-all with the second singles match left to decide it. Cohasset junior Sally Meehan had cruised through the first set, 6-1, and was up 5-0 in the second when Norwell's Katherine Kelley staged an impressive comeback to force a second set tiebreaker. Kelley won it to force a third and final set.

Meehan settled back down, however, and won several close games to take the third set, 6-1.

"She loves the pressure and having a lot of people watching," said Skippers head coach Gigi Meehan. "That was a big win for her and for the team."

Cohasset's other two points came from third singles and first doubles. Freshman Maddy Altholtz dominated at third singles, winning all 12 games of her match and continuing to impress her coach in the process.

"I knew she had the physical ability to play, but what I didn't know until now was how mentally ready she is to play," Meehan said.

Senior Elizabeth Landon and sophomore Maggie McGoldrick teamed up at first doubles to win convincingly, 6-4, 6-1. After a lot of experimentation with her doubles lineup, Meehan said she has settled on Landon and

Softballers make playoff push

The Cohasset High softball team won two games earlier this week to improve to 4-5 and get itself squarely back in the hunt for a postseason berth.

In Monday's 6-3 win over South Shore League rival Norwell, Virginia Spofford got the win on the mound for the Skippers and went 2-for-5 at the plate. Christina Pinkus added three hits of her own, including a home run and a double.

The following day against Mashpee, Pinkus went the distance on the mound in an 8-2 win over Mashpee. She struck out seven Falcons batters.

Spofford again collected two hits, and scored twice. Kristin Monaco and Brittany Dunn both also had multiple-hit games.

The Skippers hosted East Bridgewater Thursday in a game played after the Mariner went to press, and have three key games next week: Monday at home against Abington (3:30 p.m. start), Tuesday at Carver (3:30 p.m.), and Thursday at Harwich (4 p.m.).

CHS boys roll over Norwell

The Cohasset High boys lacrosse team had an impressive tune-up for its big game against Scituate yesterday (played after the Mariner went to press), beating a solid Norwell team Tuesday night, 17-7.

Minutes after watching his team get picked apart by the Skippers – less than a week after a big 7-4 win over Hingham – Norwell head coach Tom Flanagan said his Clippers have to maintain an even keel about anything that comes their way.

"Don't get too high about the Hingham game, and don't get too low on the Cohasset game," Flanagan said. "We know what we need to work on."

Not giving up four goals in the first five minutes would be a good place to start, as that's exactly what happened Tuesday night, and Norwell could never quite recover. Mike Grimm scored twice in that run, with Mark Flibotte and Jeff Brown adding one apiece.

Mike Bunstein assisted the first two goals, on his way to a one-goal, five-assist performance that certainly caught the eye of Cohasset head coach Stew Curran.

"Mike just handles everything. Everything seems to go through him," Curran said. "He gets the ball quickly to the right guys who are open, and Mike always seems to find the guy and put it right in their stick. He throws a very catchable pass, which is sometimes a unique art."

Barry Driscoll got one back for Norwell before the end of the period, finishing a nice feed from teammate Dan Ferzoco to make it 4-1 through 12 minutes. Norwell's defense, led by Kevin Helm and Kenton Magown, appeared to be settling down, and the Clippers' attack forced Cohasset goalie Nate Porter to make a couple fine saves at the end of the period.

Whatever momentum Norwell established at the end of the first quarter was quickly lost going into the second, as Brown, Grimm and Flibotte all found the back of the net for the Skippers within the first 3:30 of the period. A huge factor in Cohasset's dominance on this night was the work of midfielder Chuck Czerkawski on the face-offs, as

Lady laxers face uphill climb

At 3-4, the Cohasset High girls lacrosse team has some work to do to qualify for the Div. 2 state tournament.

The Skippers' most recent game came Tuesday in Norwell against the two-time defending state champion Clippers. The game was expected by many to essentially decide the championship of the newly formed South Shore League.

Cohasset figured to be Norwell's sternest competition within the league, and the Clippers came through in a big way with a 12-4 win. Having already beaten Mashpee, Norwell need only beat Abington at home on Tuesday to win the league title.

Both Norwell and Cohasset got off to a slow start offensively on Tuesday, as the score was 0-0 through six minutes. The Clippers, behind the efforts of Molly Dwyer (three goals, two assists) and Jill Cammett (four goals), eventually got things going, and Norwell had a commanding 8-1 lead at the half.

Cohasset put together a run early in the second half, with goals from Lindsay Durkin, Kara Wilcox and Caitlin Mahoney bringing the Skippers back within five, 9-4. That would be as close as they got, however, as Skippers head coach Chuck Jaffe saw his team dig too big a hole for itself in the first half.

"[Norwell goalie] Katie O'Hara made a couple big stops for them, they took the lead and we were a little flat," Jaffe said. "Norwell is not a team you want to have to come from behind against."

Cohasset hoped to get back to .500 Thursday at Pembroke in a game played after the Mariner went to press. Next week, the Skippers are scheduled to play three critical games in as many days: Tuesday at home against Mashpee (4 p.m. start), Wednesday at home against Hingham (4 p.m.), and Thursday at Notre Dame Academy (3:30 p.m.).

the Skippers' junior won just about every draw to help give Cohasset an overwhelming advantage in possession.

"If we can dominate on the face-off – and we did for a better part of the Duxbury game (a 14-11 Duxbury win on April 26) – we're really a pretty good lacrosse team," Curran said. "We move the ball well on offense; we have athletic attackmen."

Driscoll scored the second of his four goals halfway though the period to make it 7-2, but Flibotte and Chris Davis responded immediately with scores for Cohasset to make it 9-2. A Driscoll tally with three minutes left in the half accounted for the halftime score of 9-3, but the second half was again all Cohasset.

The Skippers shut out Norwell 3-0 in the third period and scored the first two goals of the fourth to make it 14-3 before Norwell freshman Paul Donovan broke the dry spell for his team. Overall, though, there was little the Clippers' attack could do, thanks to some stifling man-to-man defense from Brown, Ryan Kucinski, Bobby Meikleham, Jake Cuneo and Conor Holway.

Not to be lost in the winning effort for Cohasset (6-2) was a strong game by midfielder Dan Trendowicz, who had three points (one goal, two assists) and teamed with Czerkawski and Brown to simply control the game in the middle of the field.

Grimm wound up leading the Skippers' attack with five goals, followed by Flibotte (three goals, two assists), Brown, Davis and Czerkawski (two goals each). Vinny Curran also found the back of the net for Cohasset.

As for the Clippers, after Driscoll it was Donovan, Mike Rapa and Dave Hassell with a goal apiece. Cody Cavicchi had three assists.

Skippers 18, Martha's Vineyard 5

Bunstein (four goals, three assists) and Flibotte (four goals, one assist) led Cohasset in a romp over Martha's Vineyard on Sunday. Davis added three goals and Grimm had one goal and three assists. The Skippers dominated the first quarter, streaking to a 7-2 lead.

Flibotte started the scoring with an unassisted goal dodging from behind. After Brown stole a pass while Cohasset was a man down, he found Bunstein behind the cage who drove hard to the goal. Grimm then found Flibotte alone on the crease for another tally.

Bunstein followed quickly with a beautiful bounce shot to the upper corner. After Martha's Vineyard scored with the man advantage, Bunstein scored again dodging from behind. After a defensive stop at midfield, Flibotte found Bunstein alone for still another goal. Davis scored before the final buzzer on a nice cycle play off the left slot with the final feed from Bunstein.

Cohasset continued the offensive onslaught in the second period as Trendowicz assisted on another goal by Flibotte. Brown then stripped a MV middy of the ball and started the fast break with a pass to Bunstein who returned the ball to a streaking Brown for a rare behind-the-back shot and goal with his long-stick. Grimm assisted a hard cutting Davis for a quick stick goal and then Bunstein found Grimm open in the slot who beat the MV goal with a near-side rocket into the upper corner with the man advantage. Grimm found Davis again to close out the first half scoring.

Cohasset's dominance was made possible by the outstanding face-off work of Czerkawski and PJ McCaw. Time and time again, Czerkawski and McCaw won the draw (13-of-16 in the first half) giving Cohasset possession and control. This game also saw the varsity starting debut of freshman goalie Jack Murphy, subbing for the injured Porter (broken thumb). Murphy finished the game with 12 saves, including three show-stoppers at point-blank range in the third period. Curran was pleased with the defensive effort and Murphy's composure.

"It was good to see Jack Murphy step in and do the job. The freshman showed a lot of poise," he said. "Defensively, we played much better than against Duxbury. Our seniors - Jeff Brown, Ryan Kucinski, Bobby Meikleham and Conor Holway - did an excellent job today keeping the pressure off our young goalie and on the MV attack. We defended on-the-ball with more pressure and their adjacent offensive players were taken out with shut-off defense forcing the MV players to weather a stout onslaught from Brown, Meikleham, Kucinski and Holway."

During the second half, Cohasset was able to rest many of its starters and get the JV some valuable playing time. The scoring was highlighted by a length of the field rush by Trendowicz through the entire MV defense finishing with a hard bounce shot to the upper corner. Curran also had his first two varsity goals, the second coming after he made a nice steal of an attempted clear and then faked the MV goalie low, then high before burying the shot.

Czerkawski played a major role in the final two goals assisting on another Flibotte goal off the fast break and winning a face-off flip to Brown who drove the lane scoring unassisted.

Duxbury 14, Skippers 11

For a number of years, Duxbury has been the gold standard of schoolboy lacrosse in Massachusetts.

The Green Dragons are the three-time defending Div. 1 state champions and were ranked nationally by U.S. Lacrosse at the start of this year. They have not been beaten by a Massachusetts team in over three years. The Cohasset Skippers traveled to Taylor Field last Thursday with a big upset in mind.

Unfortunately, it was not to be, as Duxbury rode a streak of four unanswered goals (mostly on fast breaks) in the final quarter to a 14-11 victory.

Cohasset started strong with the man-up advantage as Grimm found Bunstein, who fed Flibotte for the goal on a backside cut. Czerkawski won the ensuing face-off, started a fast break and found Flibotte again on the crease for a quick 2-0 Cohasset lead.

After Duxbury answered with a goal, Bunstein scored unassisted on a power dodge from up top. Grimm then dodged from behind and somehow found an angle for a quick snipe over the goalie's shoulder into the near side upper corner. Although Cohasset dominated the period and the possession, Duxbury trailed by only one at the quarter's end.

Duxbury controlled the start of the second quarter scoring three quick goals on some nifty inside passing to take the lead. Bunstein found a quick cutting Davis for a goal to narrow the margin to one at halftime.

At the start of the third period, Davis scored again on a nice feed from Flibotte to tie the game. Duxbury then went on another run with three unanswered goals. Grimm tried to bring Cohasset back in the final stanza with two unassisted goals beating his man clean on roll dodges from the side. Cohasset seemed to run out of gas, however, as Duxbury went on its four goal fast break streak to seal the game.

Cohasset played hard until the final buzzer as Bunstein found Flibotte again for a man-up goal. Trendowicz fed a streaking Davis for another goal and Flibotte scored the final Cohasset tally on still another Bunstein assist.

Curran was disappointed in the outcome.

"We did not play our best game today," he said. "Eleven goals ought to be enough to win a game like this. We had some lapses on the defensive end and too many Green Dragons were roaming free in the middle. We did not slide well, particularly on the fast break. I think we got a little tired in that third and fourth period when Duxbury went on its runs.

"You have to give Duxbury credit. They are an excellent and deep program and moved the ball very well. They took it to us in the second half."

Bunstein (one goal, four assists) and Flibotte (four goals, one assist) led the Cohasset offense. Grimm and Davis each had three goals in the losing effort.

Local 9 looking for consistency

By Eric MacCarthy
CORRESPONDENT

As a team, the Skippers are only batting a combined .226 through nine games.

After a two-game slide the Cohasset baseball team finally looked its best as it beat their South Shore League rival, the Hull Pirates, by a score of 6-1.

Lowering his season ERA to 2.40, junior pitcher Brian Hill pitched a complete game with no earned runs while giving up only three hits and one walk. He also recorded eight strikeouts.

Although the Skippers' offense had only four hits, the team was able to take advantage of three Pirate errors to get men on base. Junior Dave Snowdale had the hit of the game with his two-run double.

Once again, the Skippers were unable to play consistently for two games in a row, as they lost to Norwell in an exciting game, 8-7. Hill started on the mound again for the Skippers, but this time he was not his usual self. He gave up six earned runs off nine hits and four walks, all in only three innings pitched.

After those three innings Cohasset trailed the Clippers 8-0 and things were not looking good. With the great relief pitching of Snowdale, who gave up only one hit and struck out five batters, the Skippers were able to get back into the game with some good offense. Of Snowdale's performance, head coach Al Gallotta said, "He gave us a huge effort and we were able to climb back into the game."

Climb back into the game is exactly what the Skippers did. Over the next three innings the Cohasset lineup finally did what Gallotta has been looking for all year. Two players were key to the Skippers' seven-run outburst. The first, sophomore John Sturino, had two RBI on a single and a triple. Also, junior Chris Rose had two hits and four RBI. Although he has been platooning in left field, Rose has emerged as a frontline player after starting the season as a backup.

Cohasset's struggles continued as they had to travel all the way down to Mashpee on Tuesday. This time it was junior Sam DeGiacomo pitching for the Skippers and he did a great job. In a complete game, he gave up nine hits and only three earned runs. He also had four strikeouts during the game. Unfortunately this was not enough as Cohasset lost the game, 3-2.

Captain Nick Zappolo had two hits, but it was junior catcher Kyle Pinkus that drove in Cohasset's two runs on a single that put Cohasset up 2-1 in the sixth inning. Mashpee tied the game up in the bottom of the sixth and would have gone ahead had it not been for a spectacular play by second baseman Pat Doonan.

A three-sport varsity athlete, Doonan has had his number of special plays at Cohasset and this one was no different. With a man on third, the ball was hit up the middle and Doonan was able to make a diving stop to save the game at the time.

In the bottom of the seventh inning, though, Mashpee won the game on a bases loaded walk that ended a great game by both teams.

This gave Cohasset a 3-6 overall record for the season and made the team's hopes for the tournament slim.

"There just aren't any teams in this league you can show up and expect to win," said Gallotta of the very tough and competitive South Shore League.

The hitting as been a weakness for Cohasset. As a team, the Skippers are only batting a combined .226 through nine games. They will look to turn it around against East Bridgewater today at Milliken; first pitch is scheduled for 3:30 p.m.

strength of a Durkin goal and an Amy Meikleham penalty shot. Wilcox then fed Durkin and scored the fourth goal herself, just 6:08 into the game.

From there, the thing Cohasset did best was respond to whatever Martha's Vineyard could muster, so that the visitors' first goal at 12:23 was countered by a Durkin score just 27 seconds later. And when the Vineyard scored at 22:02 of the first half to close the gap to 6-4, Cohasset needed just 70 seconds to extend the lead back to three going into the half.

The second half was more of the same, with every Vineyard score answered by a Cohasset goal. When the Vineyard drew within two at 9-7 roughly halfway through the period, Cohasset extended its offense and controlled the ball, forcing the Vineyard to spread its defense in order to mount some pressure.

The result was an offense that not only choked off the time, but scored three goals to make the lead 12-7 with 45 seconds remaining. With Cohasset having removed all starters except for goalie Aisling Guinee by that point, the Vineyard was able to break through for two goals in the last minute of play to make the final score look a bit closer than the action would have indicated.

Durkin finished the day with five goals and one assist, Wilcox added three and one, Meikleham scored twice, Caren Garber added a goal and an assist and Tessa Leahy converted a penalty shot. Guinee made 12 saves in the Cohasset net.

Duxbury 14, Skippers 5

Cohasset hosted powerhouse Duxbury last Thursday in a game that was closer than the final score would indicate. Two-thirds of the way through the first half, it was Duxbury 4, Cohasset 3.

Duxbury scored two late goals to make it 6-3 at the break, and scored the first two goals of the second half to make it 8-3. When Durkin scored to make it 8-4, Cohasset started to press for the chance to get the ball; it didn't work and Duxbury ran off five straight goals. Two late goals for each team completed the day at 14-5, Duxbury.

Durkin had three goals for Cohasset, with Meikleham and Leahy both converting penalty shots early in the game. Guinee made 11 saves in net.

The Green Dragons' Kara Olosky – who is headed to UMass next year to play lacrosse — hit Cohasset for five goals and five assists, with Tricia Babson scoring five and two.

Skippers 14, Abington 3

On April 24, Cohasset played Abington in the first-ever girls lacrosse game in the new South Shore League (Norwell and Mashpee were playing the same day, but they started later). Cohasset jumped out to a 10-0 lead over the Green Wave just 10 minutes into the game, and then put the brakes on and cruised to a 14-3 win.

Thirty-five different Cohasset players saw action in the game: Durkin led the scoring with three goals and one assist in less than a half of play. Wilcox and Kayla Farren each scored twice, with single goals coming from the sticks of Leahy, Mahoney, Meikleham, Grace Steele, Katie Gaumer, Isabelle Franklin and Guinee, who was relieved of her goaltending duties and played in attack for most of the second half.

Cohasset Boys Youth Lacrosse

Once again, the U15 Blue squad demonstrated their superior lacrosse skills and easily knocked off Bridgewater by a score of 6–2 last Sunday.

Cohasset maintained total control over the entire game and accomplished this with only one substitute. The ability of our players to dominate all aspects of the game against a more fortified opponent speaks volumes to their athleticism and grasp of the game. From ground balls and quick upfield clears to controlling the ball on offense, the Cohasset side set the pace.

It's somewhat uncharacteristic that our scoring came from just three players. Charlie Coffman posted a great assist. Derek Youngman netted two goals and had two assists and Alex Kinnealey fired four goals and had two assists.

Although the scoring was not widely spread, it was obvious to the coaches that everyone on the Cohasset side had a dominant moment of some type; whether winning a ground ball from a crowd, making a long pass, chasing a shot to maintain possession, or finding the open man. Those are the aspects of the game that caused us to have the scoring opportunities that led to the win. That's what makes it a great game.

The U15 White hosted perennial archrival Hingham this past Sunday in a match-up that seemed to be settled right at the opening whistle when Thomas Flibotte took the first face-off down the field, fed a cutting John Collins, who then finished the play with a eye opening behind the back "snipe" that set the tone for the day as the kids never looked back in what turned out to be another strong double-digit win.

This group of talented seventh and eighth graders seemed to be in full stride throughout the day unlocking all the fundamentals keys for a winning effort by not losing a single face-off, dominating ground balls and time of possession, and demonstrating why team lacrosse always beats individual skills with the majority of their strikes coming from single or double passing strings.

Hingham tried to muster a response, but the home team was relentless on defense led by Geoff Swain and Dean McNary, as they quickly disposed of each of their offensive advances with Sam Leahy demonstrating some "interesting" form while taking his chances in between the pipes and keeping the victory secure.

This game also saw some great contributions from some of the supporting cast as well, with Grayden Foley scoring on a nice pump fake from up top, Brendan Bukowski finding the back of the net by standing his ground off a fast break, and a beautiful finish by Danny Czerkawski off of a coast to coast clear by Mitch McNary, who also teamed up with his brother, Dean, on several combos that kept the margin intact.

Cohasset U13 Blue played its third game of the season on the road in Bridgewater last Sunday. The boys came ready to play and dominated the home team throughout all four quarters of play.

Anchored by two stellar goalie performances from Mats Nelson in the first half and Nate Morse in the second half, Cohasset led from the opening face-off and never looked back. Cohasset led 4-1 at the end of the first quarter, and finished the half up 7-2. Cohasset had solid midfield play from Andrew Fontaine, Blair McGowan, Cole Kissick, Tommy O'Brien, Chris Lund, Ryan McKeon, Henry Brown and Charley Michalowski.

The second half saw continued solid offensive play led by Cohasset's attack of Matt Arnold, Tommy Powers and Chris Sylvia. In addition to the well-oiled offensive performance, Cohasset has a steady, committed defense lead by Zach Strecker, Blake Erler and Colin Bell. The game ended with Cohasset recording a solid 11-4 win.

Next up for the squad is a home game against Sandwich this Sunday at Milliken.

The U13 White team also hosted Hingham in a tit-for-tat game that saw multiple lead changes, goal-for-goal advances, and great play on both sides of the field for a classic 15-rounder.

Axel Seppala started things off by grabbing a ground ball up at mid-field and dodging through several players to find glory on a nice up and down move. Nick Tangherlini teamed up with just about everyone on offense (while coming from the defensive side for much of the game) to participate in four out of six points put up by the home team, and showed some advanced level play by finishing off a perfect draw and dump feed from John Mills who had taken it end-to-end.

Derek Benson and Mills split the goaltending duties while John Leahy, Chandler Skolnik, Connor Green and Joey Sestito (becoming the big man on defense) repelled many advances to keep the game tied or within one for most of the contest. Jimmy Maher, Dan Tangherlini, Zach Coggins and Evan Yeager provided the fresh legs on midfield throughout the game.

In the end, the visitors edged out the home team for a two-goal win, but this was one of those games that everyone enjoyed being a part of and showed off great things to come.

The U13 Black team traveled to Marshfield with a full roster of players. The large Marshfield squad was ready for a motivated Cohasset crew.

Jack Conte started as goalie and despite the strong defense provided by Teddy Patsos, Jim Lydon, Jack Leffel and Hamish Redfield, the Marshfield team showed determination and ball control. The middies, led by Colin Whelan, Will Lucas and Jack Stanganelli rose to the challenge, with Whalen leading the charge with several key plays and shots on cage.

In attack, Foster Eymer, Charlie Steele and Matt MacCormack worked every possession against a tough defense, earning their shots on cage. A strong game was played by middies Hunter Forrer, Anthony Nahill and Devin Kennedy.

In the second half, Jim Lydon suited up as goalie and made several key saves. Drew Nahill was the ultimate middy on both sides of the field with great defensive play and ball recovery. Jack McElgunn returned to defense and was relentless in his pursuit of Marshfield attack with first-rate checking. In the end, it was a great effort by the boys on a great day.

This was the second visit to Scituate after beating them in the season opener and on Sunday the Cohasset U11 Blue team came away victorious again with a 5-3 win.

Like the first match-up, Cohasset dominated in both skills and speed. Scituate seemed to have a good field sense, cleared the ball well and played a fairly coordinated offensive game. But with superior hustle and desire, Cohasset won where it counts: at the face-off, winning ground balls and by avoiding penalties.

At the whistle Cohasset won the face-off and middy Connor Naughton helped advance the ball to Ben Buckley for a shot that hit the post. The ball went back to Scituate, they advanced it to the goal and the shot went wide due to a great stick check by Evan Canney.

The ball was cleared to the midfield where Sam Arnold won the ground ball, dodged to the goal and took a shot in heavy traffic for the first goal of the game. At the face-off, Michael Lund won the duel but was tripped by Scituate, resulting in a penalty and Lund went on to shoot and score for the second goal the game.

The transition game has been one sided, in favor on Cohasset. The boys are winning more ground balls and seem to be in better position on the field to exploit opportunities. Jack Coffman and Hollis Hunnewell are two players that made great plays by being patient. Another newcomer, Davis Cronin showed excellent drive and hustle to come-up with a few key ground balls. Tim Hayes was another player who helped advance the ball across the midfield.

Scituate started the second half with a goal coming from a great combination of passes at the crease. Other Scituate shots were deflected by excellent goal tending by Curtis Golden. Graham Blackburn advanced the ball well to the offense and we saw great hustle by Charlie DeVries for ground balls.

Cohasset's more experienced fourth graders, led by Jeff Powers, Sam Murphy and Ross Erler played a heads-up game by advancing the ball and feeding the attackmen, where Matt Froio scored from a solid feed from the midfielder. And late in the game, Graham Schwandt made a great dodge to the goal for a shot and score. In all, everyone on the team contributed to a great team win for Cohasset.

The U-11 White team continued its winning ways over the weekend by handing a decisive defeat to Hingham. The Hingham team was just not a match for Cohasset, but to their credit, fought hard the entire game. What they did not possess in skill, they certainly had in spirit and determination.

The scoring opened up early as Cohasset dominated in ball control. The attack, with Adam Benson, AJ Kucinski, Sean Mavilia, Cole Morrison, Cal Robbins and Levante Haber put up eight goals and three assists. In a very unselfish act, Haber caught a difficult pass about 15 feet out from the cage, with a sure goal in sight and no defender in front of him. Instead of taking the shot, however, Haber passed off to a teammate and settled for the assist instead of the score.

The midfield continued to look impressive as they took face-offs, got ground balls, and added five goals and two assists during the game as well. Connor Hayden, Patrick Holway, Owen Kafallinos, Martin Buckley, Ryan McElhinney, Max Fitzgerald, Dan Axelson, Christian Lydon and Luke O'Brien give Cohasset great depth at middy and make it tough for other teams to get the ball.

The defense stepped up for the game and pretty much shut down the opposition. Jack Donohue, Mike Yerardi, Cameron Steele, Jake Burchill, Nick Lydon and Justin Fein all played solid and kept the ball on the right end of the field. Ian Kennedy (keeper) once again had a good performance, turning away four of the seven shots on goal away. Final score: Cohasset 13, Hingham 3.

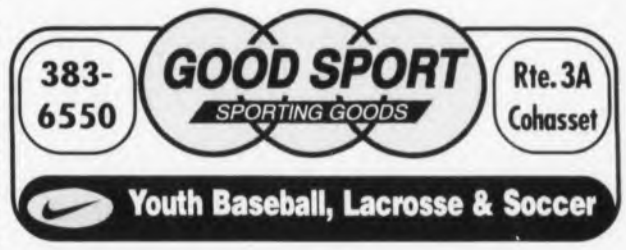
McGoldrick as regulars at first doubles for the time being.

At first singles, junior Meg Anderson had the unenviable task of facing Clippers junior Susan Bitetti, who has made the state individual finals the last two years. Despite losing 1-6, 1-6, Anderson played her opponent tough and gave Bitetti her most difficult match of the season thus far.

"Susan is just playing brilliant tennis. There's no one in our league that plays at that level," Meehan said. "But Meg was so ready to play her. Even though it was 6-1, 6-1, Meg played a lot of games to deuce and tried a lot of different things. She came to win; she didn't just come to show up and play."



Against Duxbury, the Skippers' singles players swept to give Cohasset all three of its points. Anderson (6-2, 6-0), Sally Meehan (6-2, 6-1) and Altholtz (6-0, 6-3) all played exceptionally well.

Although both her doubles teams lost, coach Meehan was pleased with how they played against traditionally strong Duxbury doubles teams. In the first doubles spot, Landon and McGoldrick won the first set and lost the next two on tiebreakers. At second doubles, senior Charlotte Landon and sophomore Lauren Allen shook off a rough first set to make things interesting in the second before eventually falling, 4-6.

Against Mashpee, four different players jumped into the doubles mix and came away with vital points for Cohasset. At first doubles, sophomore Jean Thomae and freshman Jenny Magruder won 7-6 (9-7), 7-5, while juniors Jackie Cahill and Katina Martone teamed up at second doubles for a solid 6-0, 6-2 win.

Anderson (0 and 1) and Altholtz (0 and 0) won their singles matches for the Skippers.

Coastal Stars Mite B2's take home the big trophy

The Coastal Stars Mite B2 hockey team celebrated a tremendous season that started in September and ended April 10 with the ultimate prize: the league championship. This great group of kids won the big trophy and came home with all the marbles.

Greg Ferreira of Cohasset was asked to be the head coach of the second Mite B Coastal Stars hockey team. Ferreira swiftly signed top coaching talent Todd Fithian from Marshfield as his top assistant. Ferreira then procured Tom Durkin and Mike Joslin of Cohasset and Mark Young from Marshfield to round out the coaching team.

The team was drafted back in August of 2006 and developed into a winning combination of skilled players, committed families and dedicated coaches. The team started off strong, going 7-1-2 in its first 10 games through Thanksgiving. December started off with the second loss of the season. Quickly erasing that loss the Stars went on a tear. They won 11 and tied three of the next 14 games.

As March arrived after the February vacation layoff, the team, still on vacation, absorbed a 5-0 shellacking by those revenge-seeking Seahawks. Prior to that game the Seahawks were undefeated, except for the two games against the Stars, who beat and tied them. This loss was the perfect motivation for the coaching staff.

In February and March Ferreira set up two non-league games to help prepare the team for a playoff run. The first game was against the St. Moritz Devils, an A team. The game was played at UMass. The Stars gave them a good game and almost pulled off the upset, but lost by a goal, 5-4. The team's confidence was rising.

The next game was a competition with their archrivals, the very talented Seahawks. This game was played at the Providence Bruins' home ice, the Dunkin Donuts Center. Although the game ended in a tie, the Stars carried the play and knew they could take on this competitive team in a final game.

The final playoff tune-up was the March Meltdown Tournament in Waterville Valley, New Hampshire. On March 23 in the first game against the hard-nosed (16 penalties) Cape Ann team is where the team really became a team. With all the penalties and dirty play from Cape Ann, the Stars came together and made a statement with a 7-4 victory.

Over the next 27 hours, the Stars had a ton of fun and continued their run with three convincing victories, outscoring their opponents 20-9 to put themselves in the championship game against North Reading, who they beat 7-4 in the first match-up. The coaching staff was a bit concerned with the energy level for Sunday's game as the North Reading team was sound asleep when the Stars were taking care of business late the night before.

In the championship game, the Stars completely outplayed North Reading but ended up with the silver medal. This weekend really gelled the team into a family. The parents were as excited as the players for this conquest. The young Stars ran out of gas while playing five games in 39 hours. They dominated all four opponents and went home with the silver. They played their hearts out and were nothing but determined and united as a team after this wonderful experience.

"This was the best youth athletic experience we have ever had the privilege to be a part of," said one parent.

Back home with the silver medals in hand, the Stars were more determined than ever to bring home the real championship. First up in the playoffs was a very solid Weymouth team: Stars win, 4-3. Game 2 was against the always formidable team from Hingham. The Stars dominated and won, 3-1.

On to the semifinals against the high powered and undefeated Seahawks East team they had not played yet. The Stars were determined to play one more game and came out flying, scoring in the first 20 seconds to go up 1-0. Back and forth, the Stars played a suffocating defensive game and won the one-on-one battles to take down the mighty Seahawks, 4-3 in overtime.

In the championship game on April 10, a very talented Braintree squad stood in the way of the Stars becoming champs. Determined to win the coveted crown, these Stars came out of the locker room screaming "Whoooo... let the Dogs out..."

Each player clearly focused with the "Eye of the Tiger," to take care of business.

The Stars played a menacing two-way game with suffocating team defense and plenty of firepower, winning all the one-on-one battles and winning the championship with a solid 5-3 victory.

As the players left the ice they were heard singing "We are the champions."

The Coastal Stars Mite B2 team ended their championship season going an impressive 30-4-8, making for a phenomenal season.

"I feel so privileged to have had the opportunity to coach such a wonderful and committed group of kids and have the help of the parents as well. We rarely had a player out of practice, let alone a game," said Ferreira. "This is very rare in youth hockey at this level; we really formed a bond this year. I only hope to have half the experience again. It truly was amazing. Thank you to all the players and families for such a rewarding season."

Congratulations to the entire Coastal Stars Mite B2 hockey team, their coaches and their families. This truly was a special team.

Team members include: Matty Collins, Thomas Durkin, Jackson Dutton, Kyle Ferreira, Andrew Fithian, Isaiah Jackson, Cole Joslin, Shea Kearney, Brendan MacNeil, Sam Montgomery, Colin Murray, Jack Nee, Liam O'Connell, Seamus Ryan, Bradley Winn and Nicholas Young.

Cohasset lax girls go unbeaten in six games

Cohasset's girls youth lacrosse teams closed out April with a strong weekend at home at the Deer Hill School, with a particularly exciting series of games against Norwell, and some walkovers against Quincy.

At the 11-and-Under level (grades 3 &4), the White team's game against Norwell was a virtual track meet, fast paced and with end-to-end action. The two teams traded possessions, but not goals during the first half, as Cohasset was able to secure a 3-1 lead. Dagmar Seppala, Elizabeth Baker and Alexa Bleiken accounted for the goals, with Micaela Braun, Madison Haggerty and Isabel McCarthy notching assists as the passing game set up the scores. Bebe Davis and the O'Neill twins – Callahan and Madigan – keyed a defense that allowed Norwell just two shots on first-half goalie Bennett Tierney.

The second half was keyed by the ground balls that Cohasset seemed to dominate. Midfielders Alexandra Leahy, Morgan Montgomery, Shea Kearney, Megan Fitzgerald, Jackie Driscoll and Christine Guinee all helped scoop the loose balls to keep the game moving at a brisk clip. Cohasset controlled the action and would have blown the game open, except for having several scores waved off for offsides penalties.

Undeterred, the team used the defensive play of Rebecca Brown and goalie Alexandra Raymond to bottle up the visitors. And while Norwell was able to score twice, Seppala's two goals kept the home team on top in a tight 5-3 contest.

The 11-U Blue team played to a 5-5 tie against Quincy, in a game dominated by Annie McElgunn, who did all of the Cohasset scoring. Lily McCarthy picked up an assist on one of McElgunn's five goals, and the team saw inspired play from Charlotte Allard, Caroline Farren, Cassandra Lieberman and Caty Gilman. Caroline Prescott stood tall in the goal, keeping the game close throughout.

The 13-U games (grades 7 and 8) featured another tight contest between a Cohasset White squad and Norwell. After a sluggish start that created a 3-1 hole, Cohasset was able to use a 4-1 second half to overcome a halftime deficit and pull out a 7-5 win.

The big story in the game was the play of the two Cohasset goalies and the defense. Maddie Curley made eight saves in the first half and Kathryn Dunn made six in the second half in her first ever game in the cage.

Supporting the goalies with a strong defensive effort were Molly Fitzgerald and Shannon McGowan at close defense and midfielders Emily Robbins, Hope Kissick and Lexa Grasz. The offense was led by Kristen Alexander, who scored five goals — including a nice finish off a great pass from Curley, who moved to attack in the second half – with Kissick and Grasz both accounting for single markers.

Cohasset's Blue team played a squeaker against Quincy, jumping out to a first-half lead on the strength of solid ball movement. Kate Bodner and Katie McKenna each scored two goals, with one of Bodner's scores being the result of a slick feed from Mariel Teague. Kylie Coffman scored unassisted, and contributed both on offense and defense throughout the game.

In the second half, Cohasset got comfortable its lead and also got tired with only two subs. Quincy took advantage of that complacency and raised its game a few notches scoring three quick goals to tie the game. Cohasset made some adjustments and saw great defense from Bodner, Isabelle Dunne and Maria Buckley who shut down fast breaks from a re-energized Quincy team. Cohasset had several good shots on goal but Quincy's strong goaltending foiled those efforts until – with just over a minute remaining in the game – Kathryn Dunn sank a penalty shot to give Cohasset the victory.

Maggie Littlejohn played well in the goal throughout the game, Victoria Bryan and Teague won most of the draws in the second half and played well at both ends of the field, and Gabby Weissman and Christina Tedeschi contributed to the midfield play throughout to help Cohasset secure the 6-5 win. After a 10-1 victory in Scituate on April 22, the team's record now stands at 2-1.

At the 15-and-Under level (grades 7 & 8), the Cohasset Blue team remained unbeaten, rolling over Quincy. Kelsey Erler, Whitney Jaffe and Kaci Kucinski scored three goals each – with Kucinski adding an assist – and Anna Michalowski scored a single marker as Cohasset jumped out to an insurmountable 10-2 lead at the half.

From there, thanks to solid goaltending from Ellie Tedeschi (6 saves) and solid defense from Molly McElgunn, Lauren Hayes, Taylor Kennedy and Emily Toomey, Cohasset was able to hold Quincy in check while the offense ran settled plays to set up new and different scorers. Aniko Habor, Jessica Fusco, Alison Whelan and Sarah Evans closed out the scoring in the 14-4 win; Whelan also picked up an assist on the day.

Next it was the White team, squaring off with Norwell Gold and coming away with a convincing 9-5 win. Paige DeSisto and Erler each scored a goal and an assist in the first half, as Cohasset was able to squeak out a 5-3 halftime lead. Other goal scorers were Olivia Murphy, Whelan and Jaffe. After Norwell closed the gap to one, Cohasset dominated the next 15 minutes of the game, potting three goals to put things out of reach. DeSisto, Allie Farren and Michalowski salted the game away, and Jaffe netted her second of the day on a penalty-shot blast to answer Norwell's last goal and set the final score at 9-5.

The White team raised its record to 2-1 on the year.

The Cohasset girls youth lacrosse teams return to Deer Hill School for six more games on Sunday, May 6. For details, go to www.cohassetlacrosse.com.

Cabin fever temperature soars

LIFE AT CHS

MICHAEL CORRY

Two words sum up our student: Cabin Fever. No, not the horror flick about flesh-eating bacteria — but the restlessness of students coming down the final stretch of their academic year, or career as a Skipper of CHS. It's almost time to put down those pencils, and pack up the Texas Instruments (we all know you were playing Block Dude anyway).

As the last day for Seniors approaches, we're singing the same tune every graduating class does: "We're so lucky to get out now, that place is going downhill big-time." Of course, this has nothing to do with the fact that we will no longer be here. Sure, there are a few less liberties than we'd like, but as far as public schools go, this one has most of the right tools (and numerous ways outside of school) to prepare a student for college or a career.

It's been a while, here's that news you might crave.

• Parents of seniors, save this date: Friday, May 4th, 11:30am. Jeff Wolfsberg, a widely known and entertaining speaker on adolescence, will address parents in the high school auditorium on how to facilitate a successful transition from high school to college. Jeff has appeared in Time Magazine, FoxNews, FoxNews Radio, The Boston Globe, and The Boston Herald. He will speak to Seniors separately Friday morning. This program is proudly sponsored by The Social Service League of Cohasset.

• Congratulations to Freshman Terry McCormick for making SEMSBA (Southeastern Massachusetts School Bandmasters Association)! Students prepare for strenuous auditions to fill limited spots in this regional performance opportunity.

• Attention! There is a May 5th deadline for photos to be included in the 2007 class history video. Please send or drop off photos at The Barrett's house (42 Sohier St) or give them to the wonderful Callie Barrett in school.

• Needed for Post Prom-Several silk fichus trees. Please call Paula Dickinson at 383-2717.

• Pops Night at the High School is approaching! Save the date, May 16th. Don't forget to stand up and salute the flag during the finale of "The Stars and Stripes Forever!"

• Wednesday night the Winter Sports Captain's Parents Meeting was held in the library.

• The School Committee meeting was also held Wednesday night.

• Thursday morning the PSO/Principal's Meeting took place.

• The Student Assistance Team – Opportunities for Success group met during school Thursday morning.

• Swim Team Boosters met in the Babaian Conference room Thursday night.

Have you heard? A new sensation is slowly engulfing the students of CHS. A brand new sub at the Village Deli has been getting rave reviews. I call it: The Spicy Chicken Calzone sub. It consists of a classic for any self-respecting patron of the store — spicy chicken, and is complimented by mozzarella sticks to give it the calzone feel and taste. Just stop by and ask for "Mike's Special," you won't be disappointed. Hope everybody has a safe, enjoyable weekend. See you next Friday.

Osgood Book Fair is May 9

The Joseph Osgood School Parent School Organization, PSO, will host a Scholastic Book Fair Fundraiser at the Osgood School from 2-7 p.m., Wednesday, May 9.

The Book Fair will offer specially priced books and educational products, including new releases, award-winning titles, children's classics, interactive software, adult books, and current bestsellers from more than 150 publishers.

Attendees can help the school build classroom libraries and the school library by purchasing books for teachers through the Classroom Wish List.

The PSO is a non-profit organization. The role of the PSO is to act as an advocate for public education. It is the official link between parents and schools. The PSO voices parental responses to school issues, and provides forums for administrators, teachers, and students to present their programs and policies to the public. Through fundraising efforts, like the upcoming Book Fair, the PSO provides programs and activities that enrich the school experience for students, teachers, and parents. Families, teachers, and all members of the community are invited to attend the Fair, which will feature a special theme: Book Fair Beach.

Informal screening for children slated

The Osgood Preschool staff in conjunction with the school nurse will hold informal screenings for children on the third Friday of every month from 9:15 to 10:15 a.m. The remaining date is May 18.

These screenings will consist of a play group activity as well as opportunities for vision, hearing and posture screening. These screenings are to assist in identifying those students who should be referred for an evaluation to determine eligibility for special education.

If you are interested in having your child participate, contact one of the preschool staff at 781-383-6117 no later than the Wednesday prior to one of the scheduled screenings.

DESTINATIONS

A taste of Tuscany

By Kathryn Koch
KKOCH@CNC.COM

The sun shines on the town of Castiglione della Pescaia on the Mediterranean Sea on the western coast of Italy.

The road less traveled took us through the Tuscan countryside on our tour of Italy during our annual journey overseas.

My father and I set out in late March with our first stop was in Northern Italy in the city of Bozen/Bolzano to visit Otzi, the Iceman. At some 5,300 years old, Otzi, a unique glacier mummy preserved at the South Tyrol Museum of Archaeology, was a remarkable site in his special cold chamber.

My father, who had eagerly anticipated seeing the Iceman, and I also got to see some of the clothes he wore and the equipment he used. One piece was the only completely intact prehistoric axe in the world. The birch-bark containers he used for transporting the embers of fires were particularly interesting. Photographs were not allowed inside the museum.

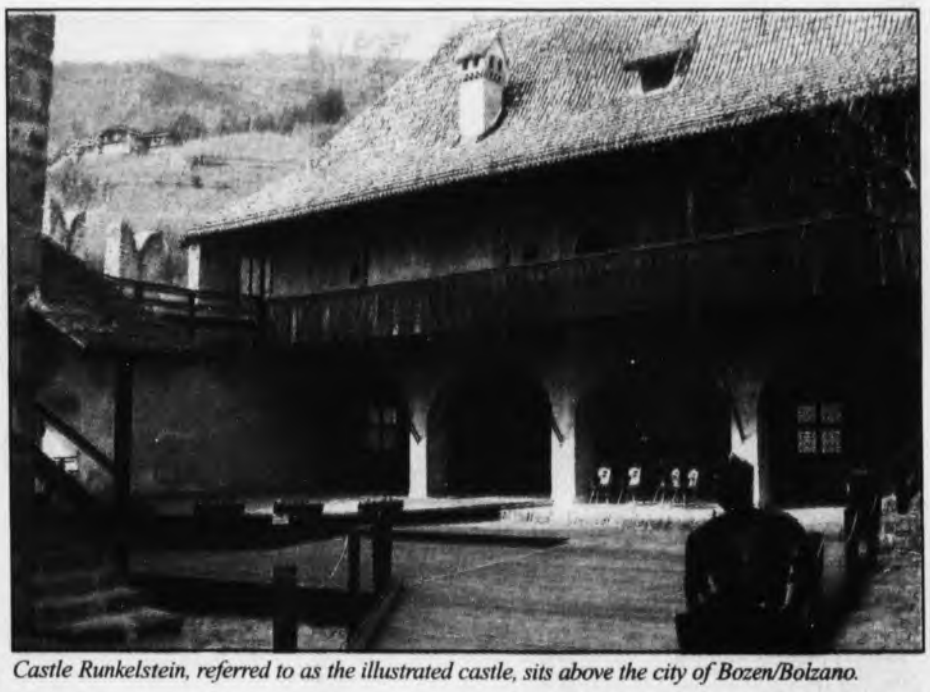
We also took a long walk one day to see Castel Roncolo (Runkelstein Castle), known as the "illustrated castle," where frescoes dating back to circa 1400 have faded but not been forgotten. In the Tournaments Room, frescoes show the excitement of a medieval tournament, the formality of a courtly dance, and scenes of big-game hunting and fishing.

The town square in Bozen/Balzano was filled with activity and many gathered around the foundation in the center.

The medieval hilltop fortress with its narrow streets and views was a pleasure to walk through and the sea shone blue below as we stood on the hilltop.

After several days in Bozen/Bolzano, we headed south on the interstate to spend another several days in Tuscany. We passed through such renowned cities as Verona, Bologna and Firenze, or Florence, the capital city of the Tuscan region.

Once we left the beaten path that was the interstate, and arrived at the Toscana Verde hotel in Arezzo, Italy, the map was set out on the table and my father planned a course of action each day. We really took the road less traveled many days.



One day, we decided to drive to the west coast of Italy to see the Mediterranean Sea, and in my case, stick my feet in the water. The town we spent most of our time in was the ancient seaside town of Castiglione della Pescaia. The medieval hilltop fortress with its narrow streets and views was a pleasure to walk through and the sea shone blue below as we stood on the hilltop.

Another stop was to the little village of Il Borro, an ancient medieval village that's part of a large estate. We actually just happened upon it, as was often the case on this trip. It was a very quaint Tuscan village with the narrow streets typical of the region.

All over the Italian countryside, and even along the interstate and smaller highways, grapevines grew. The farther south we traveled, the more olive trees we saw. Castles are also a common site. We missed the guided tour inside Castel Tasso, but walking around outside was still like taking a step back in time, minus the German shepherd looking out the window.

Eating real Tuscan pizza and Italian risotto were the culinary highlights of the trip. My glimpse of life in Italy came to an end with a rush of sheep crossing the road as we watched and a plate of penne alla arrabiata.

All told, we drove more than 2,500 kilometers, or 1,550 miles, with me, the navigationally-challenged, as my father's navigator. Thanks, Dad.

Castle Runkelstein, referred to as the illustrated castle, sits above the city of Bozen/Bolzano.

Uve F. Hublitz

Radiological pioneer, writer, photographer

Uve F. Hublitz

Dr. Uve Friederich Hublitz, 71, of Hingham, formerly of Cohasset, died in Naples Florida on April 16, 2007, after a long battle with lung cancer.

Born in Berlin, Germany, he immigrated to America in 1951 with his parents, his sisters, Antje, Doris, and Karin and his brother Bernd. After graduating from Manhasset High School in N.Y., he volunteered to serve in the U.S. Army as a medic from 1954 to 1956. Dr. Hublitz was a Magna Cum Laude and Phi Beta Kappa graduate of Columbia College in 1961 and went on to obtain his medical degree from Tufts University in 1965. After completing his internship and residency at Boston City Hospital and a fellowship at New England Medical Center, he practiced interventional cardiovascular radiology for 30 years at Brockton Hospital, where he was the first interventional radiologist in the area.

Dr. Hublitz served as Chief of Staff and President of the medical staff from 1984 to 1986. As an associate clinical professor at Boston University, he trained many young doctors, wrote scientific papers in radiology and gave technical presentations of his work throughout the United States and Europe. He was longtime resident of Cohasset, where he and his wife, Ann raised their family. The couple recently moved to Hingham to enjoy their retirement.

Uve was a true renaissance man who was able to convert his early naturalist interests into becoming a noted ornithologist and photographer, giving freely of his time and pictures to South Shore area schools and civic groups. His children and grandchildren continue to be delighted by his writings that converted his knowledge of nature into clever poetic rhyme in his published books of children's poetry. Uve was an avid bird watcher and photographer, gardener, fisherman, golfer, tennis player and sports fan. He loved good food, fine wine and good company, and as such became a long time active member of Les Amis d'Escoffier of Boston.

He leaves his wife Ann; his children, Heidi, Kris and Kyle and his grandchildren Bridgett, Emily, Ryan, Finn and Luke.

A memorial service will take place at 1 p.m., Friday, May 4, at The Second Congregational Church of Cohasset at 43 Highland Ave, Cohasset, followed by a reception at Atlantica on Cohasset Harbor from 2 to 4 p.m.

Donations in his memory may be made to The Hospice of Naples, 1095 Whippoorwill Lane, Naples FL. 34105, or the Lung Cancer Online Foundation, Box 762, East Setauket, N.Y.11733.

Take a bow

Spotlight shines on local high schools

By R. Scott Reedy
CORRESPONDENT

Student productions at Silver Lake Regional and Pembroke High Schools have been nominated for a total of nine North Shore Music Theater (NSMT) "Spotlight Awards." Created to honor excellence in high school musical theater, 25 high schools are involved in this year's second annual program, which will culminate in an awards ceremony on May 15 on NSMT's Beverly stage.

"Our second year is shaping up to be even more spectacular than the first," explained Burgess Clark, NSMT's Director of Education. "Our panel of judges — comprised of 25 theater professionals — saw so many impressive productions that we had a truly tough time determining the best of the best."

Fifteen awards will be given out, including one for Best Musical. As a nominee for Best Musical, Silver Lake Regional High School will receive a $1,000 donation from Danversbank to help further the school's performing arts program.

Silver Lake's production of "The Sound of Music" — performed Feb. 2-3 and 9-10, at the Kingston Intermediate School in Kingston — has been nominated for Best Direction, Kelley DePasqua, Kathryn Leontie and Heather Bates; Best Musical Direction, Kelley Depasqua; Best Leading Actress, Patti McDonough; Best Supporting, Actress Kelly Rice and Best Musical.

"North Shore Music Theatre's Spotlight Awards are an inspiration for young performers."

Joyce Kulhawik, arts and entertainment critic for WBZ-TV News

Pembroke High School's production of "The King and I" has been nominated for Best Choreography, Marcie Clough, Best Technical Crew/Execution, Best Leading Actress, Meghan Haskins and Best Supporting Actor Matthew Foster.

"We heard last September that North Shore Music Theatre was planning to present these awards for the second year in a row and that we were invited to apply. Some 35 schools applied for consideration and 25 were chosen by lottery," "High school musicals operate in a kind of bubble. There is a real need to change that and NSMT is giving recognition to this need. Everyone either knows first-hand or hears about a championship football team, but only people who actually see the shows know how good they are," explained Kelley DePasqua of Plymouth, department chairperson for fine and vocal arts and a choir and vocal music teacher at Silver Lake, by telephone last week.

"North Shore Music Theatre's Spotlight Awards are an inspiration for young performers," said Joyce Kulhawik, arts and entertainment critic for WBZ-TV News in a prepared statement. Kulhawik will host the 2007 ceremony with NSMT Artistic Director and Executive Producer Jon Kimbell. The evening's top honors will be presented by Tony Award-winner Ben Vereen and Andrea McCardle, who originated the role of "Annie" in the Broadway musical of the same name 30 years ago. Other presenters will include former "American Idol" contestant Ayla Brown of Wrentham, Citi Performing Arts Center Chief Executive Officer Josiah Spaulding, Jr., Massachusetts Department of Education Commissioner David P. Driscoll, Beverly Mayor William Scanlon, Massachu-setts Advocates for Arts, Sciences, and Humanities Executive Director Dan Hunter and the cast of SpeakEasy Stage Company's "Parade."

DePasqua says she is pleased, but not entirely surprised to see Silver Lake's production of the classic Rodgers and Hammerstein musical honored with five nominations. The production was dedicated to the late Richard Shattuck, longtime coordinator of fine and practical arts for grades seven through 12, who directed the show in 1972, and was DePasqua's supervisor when she joined the school system 11 years ago.

"I knew we had strong leading players in Patti McDon-ough as Maria, and Kelly Rice who played the Mother Abess, both of Kingston. The children from the elementary and middle schools were very strong, too, as were the performers in the secondary roles. It was very satisfying, too, to be nominated alongside Pembroke. Many of those seniors were freshmen with me in 2004, the last combined class when Pembroke was part of Silver Lake. Gwynne Sousa, the department head and music teacher at Pembroke, does a wonderful job."

Musical numbers from each of the 10 productions nominated for Best Musical will be presented throughout the ceremony, including Silver Lake's rendition of "So Long, Farewell" performed by seven students, and the finale will include two students from each of the 25 high schools, with Liz Rogers of Halifax and Dan Frzzell of Kingston representing Silver Lake. In addition to Silver Lake and Pembroke the following schools are also nominated: Andover High School, Beverly High School, Bishop Fenwick High School, Dracut High School, The Governors Academy, Ipswich High School, Lawrence High School, Leominster High School, Manchester/Essex Regional High School, Marblehead High School, Medfield High School, Natick High School, Oliver Ames High School, Peabody Veterans Memorial High School, Pentucket Regional High School, Pope John XXIII High School, Portsmouth Christian Academy, Reading Memorial High School, Salem High School (Salem, Mass.), Salem High School (Salem, N.H.), Saugus High School, Tyngsborough High School, and Watertown High School.

Doors open at 6:30 p.m. for the 7p.m. ceremony on Tuesday, May 15. The North Shore Music Theatre "Spotlight Awards" are black tie optional. Tickets are $25 for adults and $10 for students and can be purchased by calling the NSMT Box Office at 978- 232-7200, by visiting www.nsmt.org or in person at 62 Dunham Road (Route128, exit 19), Beverly.

Store plans stuck

No decision on Cohasset Hardware

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

The Cohasset Hardware building is a prominent piece of architecture in the village. Wedged between Elm Street and North Main Street, it's the first building seen at the entrance of the village. Now, the Cohasset Hardware building is metaphorically wedged between past use, zoning bylaws and future plans.

Jim Watson's longtime hardware business has closed its doors, so he and his sister, Tina Watson, are ready for the next step. They appeared in front of the Zoning Board of Appeals seeking a

Flood of issues

Plant abutters want action

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

The stormwater, flooding and sewer overflow issues that have come into focus since the "Patriot's Day Storm" are not washing away with the tide. Residents from Elm Street, which borders Jacob's Meadow and is the same street of the town's Waste Water Treatment Plant, appeared in front of the Board of Selectmen Monday night. An hour-long discussion yielded few answers but raised many questions.

Residents Kathy Crosby and William Bell of 75 Elm St.and Cathy Witkos of 69 Elm St. addressed the Board of Selectmen as concerned citizens. The homeowners have reported increased flooding since mid-2004 and previous to that time their homes had little to no water during storms. The flooding, coupled with the sewer plant overflows, have left the residents with an undue burden on their two properties, both situated downstream from the WWTP at the lowest point on Elm Street. They came to the board with a sense of immediacy.

"Someone has to step up and help us," said Witkos.

To begin the conversation Chairman Gary Vanderweil outlined several efforts the Board of Selectmen is working on to address the water-related issues near Jacob's Meadow and on a townwide level.

The town has applied for a Federal Emergency Management Agency grant, which Vanderweil estimated would be $325,000 if awarded. The grant would address the outlet system, a combination of tide gates, culvert and channel, at the mouth of Jacob's Meadow in to the harbor. Vanderweil expects to hear back on the grant by the beginning of 2008.

Gliding through the water May 1, 2007, a magnetometer surveys the ocean floor during preliminary analysis of the original Minot's Ledge Lighthouse that was lost in a storm 1851, just one year after its construction. The magnetometer detects intensity and direction of the magnetic field surrounding the instrument.

Looking for first Minot Lighthouse

By John Galluzzo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Generations have passed since the first Minot's Lighthouse fell into the sea, but the final gong of the lighthouse's bell that sounded sometime after midnight on the morning of April 17, 1851, still resonates across the South Shore. Due solely to their untimely demise, Joseph Wilson and Joseph Antoine, in the tower when it fell, may be the two most recognized assistant lighthouse keepers in American history.

A catastrophic design flaw championed by engineer Captain William C. Swift led to the ultimate doom of the original tower off the Cohasset and Scituate coasts. Swift firmly believed that his design — a "rocket-shaped" lantern room atop nine legs driven into the rocky Minot Ledge — would withstand storms better than a standard granite tower. Under his theory, the rushing water driven by storms would pass through the legs and expend the bulk of its energy elsewhere, rather than smashing against the walls of a granite structure. Keeper Isaac Dunham, who took on the duties on January 1, 1850, described the tower during storms as shaking like a "drunken man," and Wilson and Antoine confirmed that notion by dropping a note in a bottle into the water the night of the fatal gale, reading "The lighthouse won't stand over to-nite. She shakes two feet each way now."

The storm that claimed the tower began on April 12 and raged for four days, forcing Wilson and Antoine to subsist on dry bread and raw meat as their final meals. The tempest, which also took many ships, eroded significant portions of New England coastline and destroyed houses as far away as the Isles of Shoals off the New Hampshire and Maine coasts has forever borne the lighthouse's name, the Minot's Light Gale.

This June, U.S. Coast Guard divers will be visiting the site of the Minot's Light disaster for the first time since that tragic night in 1851. To prepare for that event, a team of professionals from the Coast Guard, including historians and divers, the Massachusetts Board of Underwater Archaeological Resources, the Foundation for Coast Guard History, the U.S. Coast Guard Auxiliary, the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration and Norfolk County DA William Keating, Det. Sgt. Gregory Lennon, Attorney General Martha Coakley, Det. Garrett Hunt and Officer Edward Bagley get together for a photo on Law Day at Quincy District Court. The Cohasset officers were each presented with the Robert F. Dana Distinguished Service Award for Law Enforcement. Lennon and Hunt were honored for their investigation and police work resulting in confessions by those responsible for violent threats at the middle-high school. Bagley was recognized for tracking down suspects believed to have been involved in a Cohasset incident and an earlier incident in Milton. In searching one of the vehicles, Bagley found a handgun and a high-capacity magazine.

Man arrested following police pursuit

Officers from Hingham Police Department attempted to stop a man operating a 1998 Ford Crown Victoria on Main Street, Hingham, for traffic related offenses on Tuesday, May 8, at about 1 a.m. The operator of this vehicle failed to stop for the police, and fled into Cohasset via East Street, Hingham.

Police officers from Hingham and Cohasset attempted to stop this vehicle as it traveled through Cohasset. When police officers reached the intersection of Atlantic Avenue and Hobart Lane, they found that the Crown Victoria had skidded off of the roadway, crashing into the bushes. The vehicle was now unoccupied but still running.

Cohasset Police, with the assistance of Hingham Police and Scituate Police, established a perimeter and called for the assistance of the Scituate Police Department's K-9 unit. Minutes later, K-9 "Felix" and his handler, Scituate Police Officer Brian McLaughlin, arrived. As the K-9 was tracking, the Cohasset Police Department Emergency 9-1-1 Center received a call for a burglar alarm at a summer residence on Atlantic Avenue, approximately one-half mile from the crash scene.

Officers responding to the alarm call found signs of a break-in and discovered a man hiding inside the house. When this man was confronted by police officers and the Scituate Police K-9, he actively resisted arrest, and was subsequently contacted by the K-9. The suspect was then taken into custody and transported to the Cohasset Police station, where he was treated by Cohasset Fire Department Paramedics and transported to South Shore Hospital under police guard. At the hospital, he was treated for minor wounds he received as a result of resisting arrest. He was admitted to the hospital for treatment of a pre-existing medical condition.

Late Tuesday afternoon, the suspect was arraigned in his hospital bed by court personnel from Quincy District Court. He was ordered held on $1,500 cash bail. The suspect is identified as: Michael P. Garofalo, 35 years of age, from Norfolk, Mass. He has been charged with unarmed burglary, assault by means of a dangerous weapon, to wit a motor vehicle, willful and malicious destruction of property in excess of $250, trespassing, resisting arrest, failure to stop for a police officer, leaving the scene of a motor vehicle accident and violation of various other traffic laws.

"In this case the operator failed to stop for the Hingham Police for traffic violations," Chief James Hussey said. "Cohasset, Hingham and Scituate officers did a great job of hunting down the suspect after he fled the vehicle in Cohasset. This suspect has been arrested multiple times for some serious offenses. We may have prevented another one the other night."

Garofalo is also facing charges from the Hingham Police Department.

POLICE BEAT

3A at Beechwood still accident prone

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Beechwood Street near the lights continues to pose traffic safety problems.

Over the past week there were three accidents, two of which occurred under similar circumstances, police said. In two of the crashes, motorists were trying to make a left-hand turn across two lanes of traffic.

On Monday (April 30) at about 3:26 p.m., the driver of a Toyota exiting Leo's Exxon attempted to crossover two northbound lanes into the southbound lanes to head toward Scituate. Chief James Hussey said the vehicle in the northbound, right-hand lane stopped to let the Toyota out but the 1994 Ford van traveling northbound in the inside lane did not see the Toyota and a collision occurred. The operator of the Toyota was cited for failure to yield to oncoming traffic. No one was injured, Hussey said.

At 12:49 p.m. on Tuesday (May 3), the operator of a 1999 Ford tried to pull out of Coastal Nissan across the two northbound lanes to make a left-turn toward Scituate, Again, the car in the right-hand lane stopped to let the Ford out, but the operator of a 2002 Chrysler heading northbound in the inside lane apparently did not see the Ford and the vehicles made contact, Hussey said. The operator of the Ford was transported to the hospital with what appeared to be minor injuries; the operator was also cited for failure to yield. The vehicle had to be towed, Hussey said.

"We are putting together a report on that stretch of Route 3A," Hussey said. He explained that police would work with MassHighway to try and come up with safety measures that could include prohibiting left-turns from some of the curb cuts along the highway. "I don't think MassHighway would fight us on that," he said.

Another accident occurred at the Beechwood/3A lights on Tuesday (May 1) at 12:12 p.m. Police said witnesses reported that a 1992 Volvo was westbound on Beechwood heading straight through the light (toward Shaw's) when it was hit by a 2004 Ford that ran a red light. The Ford was headed southbound on 3A. All three occupants in the Volvo were transported to the hospital with non-life-threatening injuries, Chief Hussey said. The operator of the Ford was cited for failure to stop at a red light.

Trailer on the loose

The operator and the owner of a truck are both facing charges following a mishap at the intersection of Hull Street and Jerusalem Road last Friday at about 10:30 a.m. A landscape truck pulling a Bobcat on a trailer hit a bump that dislodged the trailer, Chief Hussey said. The truck, which was heading toward Hull on Route 228 (Hull Street), continued ahead while the trailer veered off the road knocking over a utility pole and scraping the front, left corner of a building at 243 Hull St.

Cohasset Police contacted the State Police truck team that evaluated the truck and the way the trailer was attached. State Police cited the owner after it was determined the Bobcat was not securely fastened to the trailer and the trailer did not have the required braking mechanism.

Cohasset Police also issued citations for the owner because the directionals were not working and the inspection sticker had expired.

The operator was cited for operating negligently.

Kayak missing

A homeowner reported to police at 7:30 p.m., Friday (May 4) that his kayak was missing from his Linden Drive yard. Chief Hussey said the caller had not checked on his kayak in a couple of months but decided to do so after reading about recent kayak thefts in the Mariner.

"I am getting the sense more and more that all the kayak thefts took place over one or two days," Hussey said. Several of the recent thefts were reported after homeowners returned from vacation and discovered their kayaks were missing. The thefts remain under investigation.

Hussey urges kayak owners to try and conceal their kayaks in some way. "These thefts were likely crimes of opportunity – a quick hit," he said.

Protective custody

Cohasset police responded to a call from Hingham police about an erratic operator that ran the red light at 3A and Route 228 and was heading into Cohasset. The cell caller then reported to Cohasset dispatch that the car was parked across from JJ's Dairy Hut and the driver "looks passed out." Chief Hussey said when the officer arrived a man was standing outside the vehicle. The 34-year-old Walpole man was placed under protective custody because it could not be determined if he in fact had been driving the vehicle. Police had the vehicle towed.

Isolated incident

Police believe a report of a breaking and entering that damaged the basement door of a downtown business was an isolated incident. The owner reported the basement door had been forced open. The incident was reported at about 3 p.m. on Tuesday (May 1). Chief Hussey said nothing was taken. He said no other reports of B&Es in the area.

Erratic driver

Chief Hussey said officers warned the operator of a truck that had been reported as driving erratically that he had been seen as having been all over the road. Hussey said the operator who had pulled into a driveway on Forest Avenue was not impaired and explained that he had been distracted. The incident occurred at about 6:50 p.m., on Thursday (May 3).

Treatment plant abutters want action on flooding

Another effort underway is a draft request for proposal (RFP) for a civil engineering firm to design a stormwater and flood control master plan that would address all areas in town. The plan would address serious flood prone areas such as Jacob's Meadow, Atlantic Ave.nue and other smaller areas, like Rattlesnake Run. Vanderweil said he is hopeful to have the RFP out to firms by the end of June so the Selectmen could have responses and estimated costs to go before the Fall Special Town Meeting. He estimates that the implementation of the master plan may cost upwards of $10 million.

"The RFP for the flood control master plan would really help. These are complex problems," said Selectman Fred Koed, who is hopeful that with a townwide plan the firm could ensure that as the town solve problems they are not causing problems somewhere else.

The Board of Selectmen met with members of the Stormwater Management Committee two weeks ago and charged them with drafting regulations for new construction. They are expected to come before the Selectmen at the end of June. He said that an increase of impervious surface has partly contributed to the increased flooding of Jacob's Meadow.

"If we have good regulations, it will prevent the impervious surface problem from getting worse and exacerbating the problem," said Vanderweil.

Vanderweil noted that other town agencies, citing the Sewer Commission, are making efforts to tackle their piece of the problem. The plant upgrades associated with the Little Harbor project have been moved up in the project timeline and are expected to be complete by the end of the year. Additional membranes, increased flow capacity and the installation of an extreme flow pipe are part of the upgrades.

"Membranes should be in place by next spring's flood season," said Vanderweil, "we've made a lot of progress and there's a lot of activity."

"Someone has to step up and help us."
— Cathy Witkos, 69 Elm St

Not enough

Crosby and Witkos did not feel that their efforts were enough. Crosby presented the Selectmen with a letter and accompanying photos and related information. It documents the most recent overflow and subsequent events. Her letter reflects extensive research into the complex issues associated with the ongoing floods and with the WWTP overflows. She outlines several events and correspondence that have led her to distrust of the Sewer Commission and other town officials.

When asked by Vanderweil what more the town could do, she proposed alternate ideas that could be implemented including lowering the depth of the meadow through dredging, building a berm around the meadow and creating a retention pond upstream. The latter, she said, was recommended in the early 90s. In fact, she said the MBTA gave the town the funding to build the retention pond and that money was used elsewhere.

The last idea she proposed was to ask the town to buy her home from she and Bell. She said that the home could be turned in to possibly five condo units. Crosby and Bell have their retirement looming and had been relying on their home investment to see them through.

In a separate letter dated April 30, 2007, Crosby and Bell wrote to the Board of Assessors asking for relief on their property taxes in 2005, 2006 and going forward. They cited an over-assessment of the property due to "exposure of high impact health and hazardous waste contamination." They now believe the value of the property to hover be $1 and $200,000. In addition, the extreme flooding has created "settlement and foundation issues" for the building. Crosby said bricks and chimneys, walls and ceilings are separating from each other. Deputy Assessor Mary Quill said the letter would go before the Board of Assessors at its next scheduled meeting.

"We can't keep up with the amount of repairs," said Crosby.

Crosby said that the town has purposefully and knowingly used she and Bell's property and other Elm Street residences, which extends to the meadow as "town water storage." She cited the Jacob's Meadow Salt Marsh Restoration Plan from June 2001.

"I hate being put in this position but in my opinion, they are forcing me to litigate," Crosby said in a phone interview on Wednesday. She said she will follow up with each of the Selectmen this week but "litigation may be the only way to protect my property rights."

Flooding causes

Vanderweil said the causes could be God, global warming, the MBTA and not impounding water at the post office but admitted he was not a scientist and could not know the exact cause(s) or solution.

"We know there are different factors contributing, but there was a drastic change between 2003 and 2004," Witkos said, "Something significant had to happen."

Vanderweil pointed out that during the fiscal year 2007 the town has been without an engineering budget, due to cuts made to support the schools when the override failed. In the coming fiscal year, beginning July 31, the town will have that line item and be able to consult with an engineer in cases like the Jacob's Meadow flooding.

Recently, representatives from the MBTA met with the Elm Street residents, State Representative Garrett Bradley, Selectmen Fred Koed, Town Manager Bill Griffin and the Special Assistants to the Town Manager for Greenbush Affairs, Tom Gruber and Mark Brennan to discuss to what extent the Greenbush construction has contributed to the increased flooding.

Griffin said that the MBTA denied that their construction has caused the increased water runoff into Jacob's Meadow. However, Griffin said he and others were at a loss of knowledge as to the long history because they were not involved from the beginning.

"There is little institutional knowledge left in the town," referring to town employees, Griffin said later in the meeting, "it's not an excuse, it's a reality."

Following the meeting Koed and Griffin felt that it was important to bring the issue in front of the Board of Selectmen.

Another reason for the increased flooding could be attributed to measures implemented to alleviate flooding near the post office on Ripley Road. After severe flooding in 1996, which left the post office accessible only by rowboat, strategies were developed to address flooding along James Brook. It included work at the upper end near King Street as well at the lower end in the village using Greenbush mitigation funds.

Downtown drainage changes could have also added to the problem.

"From what I gather new larger culverts and getting water away from the post office has left water sitting in Jacob's Meadow and it's stuck there," said Witkos, who attested that after a large rain event the water sits in their yards tide after tide.

No decisions was made by the Board of Selectmen but it seems clear that the residents of Elm Street are not going to let this issue go down the drain.

Village consultant is on board

Proposed zoning bylaw changes by Sept. 1

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

As a focal point in Cohasset the viability of the village is of the utmost importance to the town. A plan to develop a destination area that is both pedestrian friendly and economically stable is the desired result of a village consultant review. The creation of new bylaws that will encourage growth and development — in a good way — is also at the forefront of the project. A team of town planning experts will look at design, retail, parking and housing possibilities in the village area.

The town has hired Concord Square Development Company based in Boston to undertake the village planning. After receiving two proposals for the village planning RFP, Town Manager Bill Griffin requested that representatives from town boards — the Planning Board, Community Preservation Committee and Economic Development Committee — meet with the prospective firms to hear their proposal. The committee recommended that the Concord Square be hired.

"We chose them because they have specific and relevant small village experience and their predisposition for an active public discussion approach. Their deliverables were in line with our expectations and they have assembled a collection of consultants that will inform our decisions with the necessary data and expertise," said Planning Board member Michael Westcott who will be the main point of contact for the consultants.

Angus Jennings, principal planner at Concord Square, will be heading up the project. Familiar with the South Shore Jennings was the Town Planner for Marshfield for four years.

"Cohasset has a beautiful downtown just as it is and we're very sensitive of that," said Jennings, "we want to protect and enhance the village as well as ensure a stable business climate."

The village area extends roughly from Carousel Antiques to the Red Lion Inn. The area is home to over 50 businesses. For the past couple of years the village has been plagued by constant construction and revitalization efforts. Turnover of businesses has been frequent.

Westcott identified about 12 key parcels of land that could be prime for change. The lots included large or underdeveloped buildings in the village area including James Brook Crossing, Cohasset Hardware, the gas station, the Red Lion Inn and the recently razed Depot Court building. Currently, the James Brook Crossing and Carousel Antiques area is disconnected from the rest of the village area. Westcott would like to see a way for all the sections of the village to be cohesive and accessible.

Parking and open space were discussed as key issues. Greenbush liaisons Mark

Brennan and Tom Gruber, who were on hand at the meeting, said they have information as to exactly how many public parking spaces there are in the village.

"We want to define open space fairly broadly," said Westcott, who would include walkways and pocket parks as open space.

Westcott defined the primary objectives of the project would be to first preserve the character and business vitality of the area, and second, look for opportunities for open space and housing.

"It's about preserving what's there and encouraging growth," said Westcott. Hand in hand with that would be bylaw change recommendations. Westcott also said he would like to see any process changes go through existing boards, "there are too many boards already."

Planning Board member Stuart Ivimey suggested that the consultants research how many homes, apartments and businesses are current in the village district. He said that right now no one knows exactly how many apartments are in the village area. The consultants plan to build a database with information on parking, housing, businesses, landowners and merchants.

The Planning Board has been hesitant to act on any proposed bylaw changes until the consultant had provided their input. Many proposed projects in the village district have been on hold as they wait on zoning bylaw changes. Right now, multi-family dwellings are allowed by special permit, but prohibited by another bylaw stipulating the lot size must be 40,000 square foot for multi-family dwellings. Two zoning bylaw changes were passed at the Annual Town Meeting related to the village district — the village business district was established separate from the downtown district and a bylaw re-instituting a special permit requirement for apartments.

Jennings said the project would be completed in two phases. The first will be information gathering, which will take approximately 60 days to complete. Phase two will have the consultants begin drafting policies and bylaws that will need to be complete by September 1.

"September 1 is non-negotiable for bylaw changes," Westcott said. The plan is to have a set of village bylaw changes or additions ready for review at the fall Special Town Meeting. Jennings and his team will draft a specific calendar with multiple public forums and deadlines.

The kick-off meeting was concluded with a village walk that started on Highland Ave., circled around the village to the Red Lion Inn and town parking lot and ended up by Depot Court.

Meadow Lane Hearing postponed indefinitely

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

Last Thursday, the Conservation Commission heard testimony for construction on Meadow Lane. The public hearing has been indefinitely postponed due to an outstanding appeal for a building permit with the Zoning Board of Appeals (ZBA). Building Inspector Bob Egan issued a building permit for the construction at Lot B on Meadow Lane back in October. Although the property contains wetlands that fall under the jurisdiction of the Conservation Commission, the commission was not notated on the original plans. The owner of the property, Steven Ross, did not come before the Commission to get a variance or order of conditions. An order of conditions is required if there is construction within 100 feet of wetlands and a variance is needed if the structure is within 50 feet of wetlands.

Construction began over the winter and was stopped when a nearby neighbor appealed the permit on grounds of improper frontage. The ZBA found the permit to have improper frontage and halted construction. The permit is now under appeal in the court. Conservation agent Paul Shea advised the Commission to leave the hearing open until it heard back from the Zoning Board and the court's decision on the appeal has been determined.

"We need to have more information before us before closing the hearing," Shea said.

The Conservation Commission voted to continue the hearing indefinitely, the hearing will be resumed after a decision has been made by the ZBA. At that time a second hearing and notice of intent will need to come before the Commission. In the meantime, Shea suggested that the owners submit a separate application for an access road. The Commission also requested that the 50-foot buffer zone to the wetlands be restored until such time when it can be reviewed by the board.

TOP ROOKIE

Saint Michael's College baseball freshman Tim Pilczak, a member of the CHS Class of 2005, was named the Purple Knights' Perry Bove Rookie of the Year last week, awarded to the program's top first-year player.

Tim had a standout first year with Saint Michael's this spring. The 5-foot-8-inch infielder started 36 of 40 games for the Purple Knights, batting .291. He led the squad with two home runs, and was second on the team with eight doubles and 19 runs batted in. He also compiled a .447 slugging percentage, tops among regulars, while starting games at second base, third base, and shortstop.

Tim, who is a freshman majoring in business, helped lead the NCAA Division II Purple Knights to a 16-24 record this spring. The 16 victories are just one shy of the program record set in 1999, and among the team's wins this season were victories at Suffolk, at Saint Rose, and versus Saint Lawrence.

The award is named after Perry Bove, the longtime head coach of the Purple Knights from 1989-2005.

Essay is hole-in-one

High school senior wins Will McDonough Writing Contest

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

The nation is often captured by sports stories of "Cinderella" teams or individuals that begin as underdogs and go farther than anyone ever thought they would. Kevin Barber, a Cohasset High School senior, encapsulates one such story in an essay that recently won the Boston Globe's Will McDonough Writing Contest award.

Barber, an avid golfer himself, recalled a story of professional golfer Jason Gore from the 2005 US Open. His essay, "The Unlikely Story of Jason Gore," follows a golfer, Jason Gore, a relative unknown previous to the tournament, who was touted as the "everyman" of the tour after two promising 18-hole rounds.

"He hadn't had much success" up to his point in his career Barber says, "but during this tournament he started playing well and at one point he held the lead."

Gore ended up in the final pairing with defending US Champion Retief Goosen on the last day of the tournament held in Pinehurst, North Carolina. Unfortunately, that last day Gore's game was off and he shot an 84 and lost the tournament.

"It's a Cinderella story, I found the story redeeming but tragic in a way," says Barber. What makes the story even more interesting, as Barber points out in his essay, is Gore did not disappear after this shining moment, like so many Cinderella characters in sports. He proved himself to have enduring talent when he won his first PGA tournament the following year (the 84 Lumber Classic).

"In 2007, it is evident that Jason Gore, the unlikely hero of the ordinary golf fan, did what most Cinderella stories are so unlikely to do: he transformed himself from a downtrodden one-hit wonder into the champion he had always dreamed of being," Barber writes at the conclusion of this winning essay.

More than 2,000 entries from across New England were submitted from students in grades 4 to 12 and two winners from each grade were selected.

Barber, who was originally hesitant to do the assignment, recalled the premise of the story from memory but did additional research on the scores and some interesting events leading up to the tournament. Barber was able to find out that Gore's golf clubs and clothes were stolen in the week prior to the 2005 US Open.

"I think adding those little details gave color to the story," explains Barber.

Barber found out that he had won the Will McDonough Writing Contest when his English teacher, Christine Berman, told him during lunch.

"I was pleasantly surprised when I found out, I actually had forgotten about the contest," says Barber. Berman had all her students for the last two years submit an essay to the writing contest, sponsored jointly by the Boston Globe and Bank of America. More than 2,000 entries from across New England were submitted from students in grades 4 to 12 and two winners from each grade were selected. The contest had some guidelines and suggestions for themes including "good sports/bad sports," "what makes a team great" and the theme Barber chose, "character counts."

"I was reluctant to do a sports writing essay because it didn't really interest me," says Barber. But since Mrs. Berman made it a requirement for her AP English and Journalism classes, he didn't have much choice. Barber and his class sat down and wrote the essay in one 90-minute class period.

"[Barber] is one of the best writers I have taught in 34 years," says Berman of the Georgetown-bound senior.

As his prize, Barber attended an award ceremony at the TD Banknorth Garden. He says the highlight was meeting Sean McDonough, television sportscaster and son of the late Will McDonough. In addition to a night at the Garden, Barber received a plaque with a mock front page of the Globe proclaiming him the winner of the contest. His essay will be on display in The Sports Museum's Will McDonough exhibit located inside the TD Banknorth Garden.

Will McDonough, a Boston Globe columnist of 44 years, was the Globe's only sportswriter to be nominated for the Pulitzer Prize. He passed away in January 2003. McDonough was a mentor to young writers and for this reason, The Sports Museum and his colleagues from the Globe dedicated this contest in his memory.

Barber hopes to pursue writing as a focus in his college studies as well as in his career but what form his talent and interest will take is still to be determined.

"Writing is one of my strengths, so I'll probably focus on that," he thinks that majoring in English is a possibility. "In creative writing you need to have confidence in your writing. When you do it's the most enjoyable type [of writing] that you can do, but probably the most difficult."

Once he got into writing the essay, Barber enjoyed the assignment because it had "an element of creativity," more so at least than an analytical essay on literature, he says.

Barber is a member of the high school golf team, debate team, math team, National Honor Society and a writer for the school newspaper, The Spinnaker. When he's not busy with his schoolwork and extracurricular activities, Barber is often found on the golf course.

Park Serve Day seeks volunteers

Among the Park Serve Day projects identified are cleaning the areas at Wompatuck State Park. Volunteers will also plant thousands of daylilies donated to DCR for parks across the state.

State officials have announced that Saturday, May 12 will be Park Serve Day in state parks and forests across the Commonwealth, including Wompatuck State Park.

Among the Park Serve Day projects identified are cleaning the areas at Wompatuck State Park. Volunteers will also plant thousands of daylilies donated to DCR for parks across the state.

DCR will provide work gloves and equipment needed for the various projects, though participants may want to bring their own work gloves or tools, clearly marked with your name and phone number. Volunteers should not bring power tools, however. Wear sturdy shoes and work clothes and consider bringing sunscreen and insect repellent. Volunteer for just one hour or several hours - there is no time requirement at any of the projects.

Parking fees will be waived at all DCR facilities where Park Serve projects are taking place. Drinking water and a snack will be supplied, though participants should feel free to bring their own food as well.

To sign up for Park Serve Day and to see a list of all the projects, visit www.mass.gov/parkserve to register.

From the Archives of the Cohasset Historical Society

From the Archives is a weekly feature provided by the Cohasset Historical Society.

Samuel Bates opened a tin shop in 1849 at the junction of Elm and South Main streets. His son, Allen Collier Bates, expanded the business to a full hardware store in 1857. William McGaw, a local carpenter, bought the business in 1912 and ran it until his death in 1958. His employees, Robert and Helen Collier, continued to operate the business until 1965 when they sold it to Louis and Helen Watson.

It has been owned by the Watson family ever since. Cohasset Hardware has been a Cohasset landmark for more than 150 years. From getting an extra set of keys to just the right mix of paint, Cohasset residents have relied on the hardware store for all their home improvement needs. An easy stop in the Village during a day of running errands, Cohasset Hardware will be greatly missed.

Tours of Cohasset home benefit Children's Action Corps

All of the money raised through the purchase of tickets will go to the Robert F. Kennedy Children's Action Corps, a statewide nonprofit juvenile justice and child welfare agency

Curious neighbors, prospective homebuyers, decorators and anyone interested in the latest in home appliances and home technology will be raising money for the programs that educate, rehabilitate and heal underserved youth across the state when they tour WCVB's Concept Home.

Tours of the 5,600 square-foot, traditional Cape Cod-style shingled home will take place throughout May. The home, which is being built by Noranda Construction, sits on more than 4 acres of private land on 17 Ox Pasture Lane in Cohasset. With a media room, billiards room, carriage house, pool and plenty of room for a tennis court, this four bedroom, three-and-a-half bathroom home is the complete package. It will be on the market for just under $2 million.

The public is invited to tour the home Thursdays through Sundays in May. Costs for tour tickets are $15 in advance and $20 at the door. All of the money raised through the purchase of tickets will go to the Robert F. Kennedy Children's Action Corps, a statewide nonprofit juvenile justice and child welfare agency. Services include educational, residential treatment and community-based programs, which support, educate and rehabilitate children, helping them grow into healthy and productive adult members of their communities. Special events from cooking demonstrations by Boston restaurants to a mystery author panel will be featured throughout the month. For more information, and to purchase tickets, visit rfkchildren.org or call 617-227-4183.

Special Events:

- Saturday, May 12, 2 p.m.: Mystery Solved – Three of New England's top mystery writers will discuss their work. Hallie Ephron Touger, William Landay, and Chris Mooney talk about their recent works.
- Saturday, May 19, 10 a.m. to 5 p.m.: Lululemon Athletica will host a trunk show of yoga-inspired athletic apparel.
- Sunday, May 20, 3 to 5 p.m.: Chef/owner Aldo Velaj of Vlora Mediterranean Restaurant will prepare traditional cuisine from the Adriatic coast.
- A Spring Boutique Night to benefit the Robert F. Kennedy Children's Action Corps will be held from 6 to 9 p.m., Tuesday, May 22, at 17 Ox Pasture Lane in Cohasset. Enjoy a glass of wine and unique shopping in a 5,250 square foot home by Noranda Construction, which showcases the latest in home building and interior design and includes furnishings by Circle Furniture in conjunction with HGTV's Candace Olsen, among many others.

Dr. Allen Gontz, University of Massachusetts, and Victor Mastone, underwater archaeologist, examine live footage from a side-scan sonar imaging tool, May 1, 2007. The sonar images were used in conjunction with a magnetometer, used to detect magnetic field intensity, during preliminary analysis of the original Minot's Ledge Lighthouse debris field.

UMASS Boston's Department of Environmental, Earth and Ocean Sciences met recently in Boston to discuss the schedule and other details for the upcoming project.

The dive project will have three main goals. Primarily, it will serve as a training opportunity for a team of 10 Coast Guard Marine Safety and Security Team (MSST) divers out of New York City. Secondarily, while many recreational divers already know the answers to the following questions, it will officially answer many questions about the wreck site: what remains of the original lighthouse? What artifacts are still there (and, what, ostensibly, should be done with them, if anything)? and is there enough evidence to extend the National Register of Historic Places nomination for the current tower to include the debris field? Finally, it will offer the Foundation for Coast Guard History the chance to memorialize the lost assistant keepers with a plaque to be mounted either on the remains of the old lighthouse, or on the ledge itself.

Preliminary site work was completed last week when coastal geophysicist and geologist Dr. Allen Gontz from UMASS Boston oversaw primary documentation of the wreckage of the lost lighthouse.

"The early phases of documentation of the debris field utilize marine geophysical equipment," said Gontz, who has assisted in similar projects on the steamer Portland and the submarine US O-9, "specifically a sidescan sonar and a marine magnetometer. The sidescan uses sound to create an image of the seafloor that is similar to an air photo. Sound reflects off the seafloor, the type of material that composes the seafloor controls the character and intensity of return. The marine magnetometer does not create an image as such, but locates slight variations in the Earth's local magnetic field. Large pieces of iron and steel will either slightly increase or decrease the local field intensity."

The combination of the two technologies could not find a better home, according to Gontz. Basically, sidescan sonar finds an object, and the magnetometer tells whether or not it's made of steel. As the initial lighthouse was in the "iron pile" style, any positive returns from the magnetometer could potentially be related to the fallen tower.

The primary scans will provide important data to the dive team well before it assembles in June. "The geophysical data will be used to create maps and images of the seafloor," said Gontz. "These high-resolution maps will serve to guide dives and provide a large-scale, 'big picture' site overview." With dives planned for between twenty and eighty feet and the potential for obscured visibility due to disturbed sediment, such preparatory knowledge will be greatly appreciated by the divers.

The initial phase of the greater project was completed on Monday and Tuesday of last week. With choppy seas on Monday, conditions were not ideal for thorough documentation. "We used this day to investigate the area at a reconnaissance scale," said Gontz, noting that the imagery that was taken came back "slightly degraded." Tuesday, though, with nearly flat seas, was "an ideal day to spend on the water," according to Gontz. "Imagery and magnetometer data were outstanding and should produce wonderful maps and images of the area."

With phase one of the field operations portion of the project now behind them, the Minot's Light site documentation team can now look forward to accomplishing its many goals this summer.

With the team assembled, Gontz feels that the project will come to a successful conclusion. "This project is a collaboration of numerous different players, each bringing a special skill to the project. Without the complete working group, this project would never have left the dock."

Rev. Mulvehill to celebrate 50th anniversary of ordination

The Rev. John Mulvehill, pastor of St. Anthony Parish, Cohasset, will celebrate the 50th anniversary of his ordination to the priesthood with a Mass of Thanksgiving at 2 p.m., on Sunday, May 20. All are invited to attend the Mass and the reception that will follow immediately after the Mass from 3 to 3:30 p.m., in St. Anthony Parish Center.

All are invited to attend the Mass on May 20 and the reception that will follow immediately after the Mass from 3 to 3:30 p.m., in St. Anthony Parish Center.

The Rev. John Mulvehill was ordained Feb. 2, 1957.

The Rev. Mulvehill, a native of Westwood, is a graduate of Boston College High School and the College of the Holy Cross in Worcester. He was ordained Feb. 2, 1957, and served his first assignment at St. Mary Parish in Randolph. Following that assignment, he served in St. Benedict Parish, Somerville, and, in September 1965, began studies at St. Patrick's College, Maynooth, Ireland, from which he was awarded a doctorate degree in Sacred Theology. He has also pursued post-doctoral studies at the American College, Louvain, Belgium, and at North American College in Rome.

The Rev. Mulvehill was a professor of theology and later president of Cardinal Cushing College, Brookline. From 1972 through 1983, he served as director of religious education for the Archdiocese of Boston. He was pastor of St. Francis Xavier Parish, South Weymouth, from 1983 until 1985, when he was appointed pastor of St. Anthony Parish, succeeding the Rev. John Keohane who had served as pastor of St. Anthony Parish for 18 years.

Garden Friends Plant Sale

The annual Garden Friends Plant Sale of the Community Garden Club of Cohasset will be held at the Cohasset Historical Society, 106 South Main St., on Saturday, May 19, from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. There will be a wide selection of annuals, perennials and shrubs for sale. Most of the plants are ones that members have successfully grown in their own gardens. Also available are herbal products from The HERB FARMacy of Salisbury, Mass and copies of The Eclectic Gardener, a handbook for gardeners written by CGCC members and filled with gardening and lawn care information, floral arrangement ideas, seasonal recipes and suggestions for nature walks. This would be a perfect gift for any gardener-new or old. Proceeds from the sale help fund the scholarship and community projects sponsored by the CGCC.

EDITORIAL

No more plastic bags

We acknowledge that many of you are way ahead of us when it comes to "going green" — but we also know, that many of you are not.

We were inspired by a recent "Towards a Sustainable Cohasset" column by JoAnn Mirise, to put an end to our practice of using plastic, supermarket shopping bags.

In the interest of full disclosure, we will admit to being a double offender. We have routinely asked for "paper and plastic" at the grocery store. (In terms of water and air pollution during production, we have now learned that paper bags are worse than plastic!)

But we have reformed. This past week we purchased reusable shopping bags and were pleasantly surprised at both the price and the quality. They sell for $1-$1.50 each (some supermarkets might charge slightly more) and are easy to pack with groceries. They stand up in a nice "square" fashion and the straps make them a breeze to carry into the house. We also discovered they set up nicely in the shopping carriage.

The clerk at the register told us that in recent weeks he had seen more and more customers buying and using the reusable bags.

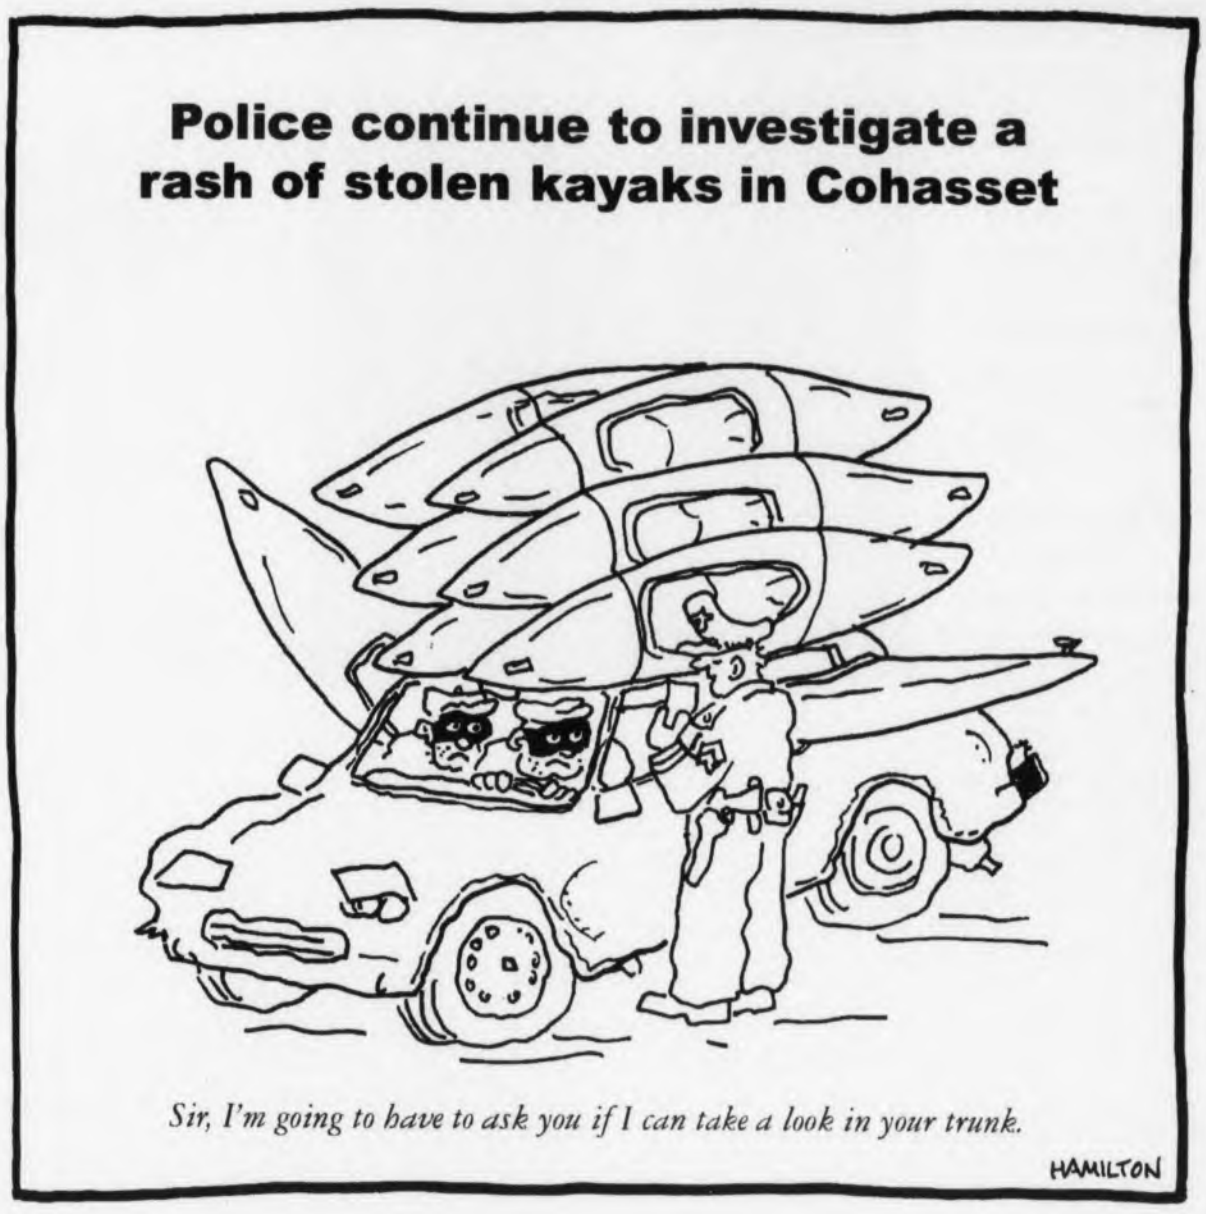
Even before we "googled" plastic shopping bag pollution on the Internet – we knew they was a problem. Look at fences at landfills, tree branches, and the shoulders of our roadways. Plastic bags are everywhere.

We area is not alone. According to www.china.org, in Beijing shopping bag pollution has reached epic proportions. Volunteers in major shopping areas handed out 15,000 free, reusable bags over two recent weekends — equivalent of 7.5 million plastic bags.

San Francisco has banned the use of non-biodegradable plastic bags.

Reusablebags.com states that plastics do not biodegrade, they photodegrade, a process in which sunlight breaks down plastic into smaller and smaller pieces. Web site sources say it can take up to 1,000 years for a high-density polyethylene plastic bag to break down.

According to www.cleangreenbags.com, worldwide we are using in excess of 500 billion plastic shopping bags a year. The Wall Street Journal estimates the US consumes 100 billion plastic bags annually which is the equivalent of 12 million barrels of oil in the manufacturing process. Fifty-three percent of those bags are distributed in grocery stores and supermarkets.



Paper bags are not the answer — www.msnbc.com states it takes 14 million trees to make all the bags we use in a year.

"The production of paper bags creates 70 percent more air pollution than plastic, but plastic bags created four times the solid waste – enough to fill the Empire State Building two and a half times," www.msnbc.com states.

It is so easy to help solve the "bag" problem by purchasing reusable shopping bags and using them. Once you unload your groceries, put the bags back in your car!

We are calling on all of you go join us in this effort by saying goodbye to "paper and plastic" at the supermarket. Reusable bags are available at Stop & Shop, Shaw's, Whole Foods, Trader Joe's, Hannaford's, and the Fruit Center.

For those of you who want to go high fashion — Europe is way ahead of us. According the LA Times, Stella McCartney is offering an organic cotton canvas shopper for $495; and Italian designer Consuelo Castiglioni has a designer shopping bag of $843!

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

380 US flags arrive Saturday

TO THE EDITOR:

To all residents of Cohasset:

Keep an eye out for – and offer a warm reception to the Operation Salute truck and trailer arriving in Cohasset Saturday May 12.

Cohasset will be honored to receive the services of Gold Star Dad Bob Lehmiller when he delivers 380 U.S. flags Saturday May 12, which will then be flown on Cohasset's field of honor – healing field, at Cohasset Harbor May 20 through 30. Hosted by the Sons of the American Legion, this is a nonpartisan event meant to honor our veterans and bring our community together in support of all our veterans and active duty troops.

Bob Lehmiller has established a foundation to honor all who serve in memory of his son U.S. Army Sgt. Michael Lehmiller 2nd Battalion, 503rd Infantry Regiment,173 Airborne Brigade, age 23 who died in Baylough, Afghanistan August 21, 2005, from injuries received during hostile fire.

You need not support the war to support the troops.

Mike's Guardian Eagle Foundation was formed in memory of Sgt. Lehmiller to "Support Our Troops.". The goal of the foundation is to provide assistance to military families their troop cannot, due to deployment injury or death. Donations to this nonprofit foundation are not in support of – or against war, they are simply to help soldiers and their families who have sacrificed due to war and are in need of assistance.

"America the Beautiful" third verse reads "Oh beautiful for heroes prov'd, in liberating strife, who more than self their country loved, and mercy more than life.

Thank you.

Post Office to help stamp out hunger Saturday

The Cohasset Post Office Letter Carriers Food Drive will take place this Saturday, May 12, to benefit the Cohasset Food Pantry. This Food Drive provides the food pantry with enough food to stay stocked through the summer months.

To help ensure there will be enough food to meet the need, the National Association of Letter Carriers (NALC) — in conjunction with the United States Postal Service, AFL-CIO, the United Way of Southeastern New England, America's Second Harvest, Cox Target Media-Valpak, and Campbell's Soup — is sponsoring a food drive this Saturday, May 12, to restock local food pantries.

The 15th annual NALC National Food Drive is the largest one-day food drive in the nation. Carriers nationwide collected 70.5 million pounds of food in the 2006 drive, the third consecutive year the effort has exceeded 70 million pounds.

The Cohasset Food Pantry particularly needs the following items: shampoo, tooth brushes, tooth paste, dish and laundry detergent, cleaning products, stretch wrap, aluminum foil, paper goods such as paper towels and toilet paper, zip lock bags in all sizes and trash bags.

The following items are not needed at this time: pasta, soup and cereal.

Remember to place non-opened, non-perishable food items in a bag by your mailbox on Saturday. It is also important to check expiration dates.

The Cohasset Food Panty and the Cohasset Post Office Letter Carriers wish to thank those who participate in advance for their continued generosity.

Having a blast in the town lot

MAKING TRACKS

TOM GRUBER & MARK BRENNAN

It's the small things that count – This past week we had a Cohasset mother notified us that there was a large gap under the new fence adjacent to the Cohasset Library Playground. We sent a photo of the problem area to the MBTA and CBB hoping for a quick fix. Within one hour we received an email back from CBB saying that the fence would be fixed the same day. That's great response. Thanks, CBB.

Let's all have a blast – Literally, next week we will have a blast in the Town Parking Lot. The area between the Teen Center and the railroad tracks will be configured for eight new parking spaces. Since this area is mostly ledge, blasting will be required to carve the spaces out of the ledge. The included photo shows a view of the work area looking from the Teen Center. The drawing we have added is a design engineer's bird's eye view of the area, including the new parking spaces.

Because blasting is a dangerous process, a good portion of the area between the Teen Center and the tracks will be closed to traffic. We are told by the blasting contractor that we should still be able to use the access in front of the Red Lion to the parking lot. But, the area near the Teen Center may be a bit constricted. If you drive in this area please be careful and follow the directions of any safety officers in the area.

You might also be interested in the fact that the Fire Chief is the person in Cohasset who enforces the blasting safety laws. Further, they usually post a fire official on the site during blasting. CBB tells us that there will be about six days of blasting.

Pond Street — The CBB busy bees continue to flock around the Spring/Pond streets intersection. The paving has been completed on the Pond Street side of the crossing. The small section that leads from the tracks toward St. Anthony's is still waiting for the two orphaned utility poles to be removed before the final paving can be done here. On Wednesday of this past week, the sidewalks received their paving. (See photo) We are getting closer and closer. We should be able to use the new Pond St. in the next couple of weeks.

Beechwood sidewalk update – We have been asked, from time to time, about the status of the Beechwood sidewalk project. As you may know, and certainly the residents in this area know, that money was approved some time ago for the construction of sidewalk from S. Main Street to Talarico Lane. The initial sidewalk concept was developed before the MBTA did its work at the Beechwood crossing. Unfortunately, technically, the area near the tracks is still under control of the MBTA. So we can't do any work there. However, it looks like after the MBTA completes its work, the sidewalk may become much more difficult to construct with than we expected. The most difficult part is the southeast side of the crossing along the wetlands. After the guardrail installation, the MBTA work looks like it will leave only a small amount of room for a sidewalk without encroaching on the wetlands. We are working with CBB to try and get sufficient width in this area so we can have safe pedestrian passage through the crossing. So, this piece of the final design is still evolving. Once this complex issue is resolved, we expect to have that sidewalk built in the fall of this year. We will continue to update our readers about the sidewalk progress.

TALES FROM THE FAR SIDE OF PERFECT

DIANE K. DANIELSON

It wasn't that long ago when I used to be able to move my entire belongings in three trips in my Honda Civic hatchback.

Hi. My name is Diane, and I'm a hoarder. I've been in denial for years, but a recently blown water heater and flooded basement forced me to face up to the demons in my cellar: hundreds of empty boxes in every possible shape and size. At first glance, it really didn't look too outrageous — neatly stacked boxes from floor to ceiling, lining every available inch of wall space. But, given that inside each of these boxes were several more, all neatly fit one inside the next like Russian nesting dolls, even I had to admit that this was probably a little bit to the left of normal.

Since my neurosis (this one, anyhow) was kept neatly organized and out of sight in the cellar, I could easily ignore it until I was frantically splashing around my basement, knocking boxes out of the way, desperate to find the cut-off valve for the broken water heater. As boxes tumbled down around me, I realized that I could end up like that Bronx man they discovered a few years ago trapped in his apartment under an avalanche of newspapers, magazines and books. It had finally come to this — the possibility of drowning alone in a sea of corrugated cardboard.

While I waited for the plumber, I looked around and realized I needed to take action, and I needed to do it right now. First, I tried logic. What were the odds of my having to pack up and immediately relocate into a witness protection program in the middle of the night? Pretty slight, considering that my life is far too unexciting for anything like that. But, one never knows. And, what if I had to suddenly ship an odd-sized or abnormally shaped object? Chances are that I would find it less time-consuming to visit the UPS store than to search through the boxes in my basement. Therefore, these arguments, unlike my cellar, didn't hold much water.

But, what was it with me and boxes? I'm extremely attached to my clothes; yet, each season, I purge my closets of ill-fitting garments and ill-advised purchases. (Just what I was thinking when I bought that fuchsia-colored pantsuit, I'll never be sure; but I'm hoping someone else will have the panache to pull it off.) I also manage my perennially reproducing periodical piles by implementing a two-month magazine moratorium. If it's not read by then, I can always look for it later on-line. And my formerly out-of-control book collection? That's kept in check by my new love affair with my local library. Now, I just had to apply these same tough love techniques with my boxes.

First, out went any box that had gotten wet. That was easy. Next, out went boxes for electronic equipment that I no longer owned. (Since I haven't seen that cassette player since college, I'm guessing I don't really need the box.) Still, that barely made a dent. What to do next? That was when I remembered that somewhere along the line I managed to acquire a book about clearing your clutter with Feng Shui. The main premise is that clutter creates stress. But was my clutter in my cellar actually causing me stress? Well, certainly it was as I stood ankle deep in water surveying the damage. But could it possibly be my stress about not knowing what might happen in my future that was actually causing my clutter?

It wasn't that long ago when I used to be able to move my entire belongings in three trips in my Honda Civic hatchback. And move I did, practically every six months depending on which direction my life took me. What freedom, to be able to pick up and move on a whim. Yet, here I am with hundreds of empty boxes ready to move on a moment's notice, yet never feeling more weighted down and immutable.

So, I did it. I tossed out those darn boxes. (O.k., I kept a handful for old time's sake; you can't expect a hoarder to go completely cold turkey.) And, while I might now have difficulty packing up and relocating in a matter of hours, I've never felt freer to do just that. Perhaps there may be something to this Feng Shui stuff after all. Now where "Feng Shui" did I put that dang book?

Offensive nicknames

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

Alas, another Indian has bitten the dust — by his own hand, you might say.

The Dedham High School Boosters Club has decided to accede to the demands of the Native Americans among us and retire the image of the angry Indian that has represented the schools athletic teams for at least the past 35 years.

"It's time for it to go," Anthony Mucciaccio told the Globe. "People say it's not right. It's not a very friendly or happy-looking Indian."

Not only that but the Boosters are thinking of dumping the school nickname, "Marauders," which, as our history books tell us, the Indians used to do when they weren't painting their faces, doing the war dance or attacking wagon trains.

A second Bay State League school, Natick High, recently voted to drop its nickname, "Redmen," in the face of protests from Native Americans, who don't like to call themselves Indians and don't like others to do it either.

The annual debate is about to get underway, I am told, over the use of the nickname Red Raiders by North Quincy High School and their cartoon mascot, Yakoo, who, they say, erroneously portrays them as warlike.

Unfortunately for the protesters, say the Friends of Yakoo, he is not an Indian at all, just a former student of Armenian descent named Allan Yakubian, clad in the national dress of Armenia — breechclout, feathers and tomahawk.

The sportsmanship committee of the Massachusetts Interscholastic Athletic Association is contemplating urging all its member schools to drop any logos that may be taken as offensive by Native Americans or any other group.

The National Collegiate Athletic Association has whittled the number of colleges using offensive nicknames down to 18, including the Florida State Seminoles, who have written notice from the Seminoles themselves that they don't mind being offended.

With all this hurley burley going on around them, it's strange no one has noticed that Braintree High School's Wamps are not nicknamed for a strange animal from the Amazon jungle but for a local Indian chief.

It was Josiah Wampatuck who sold the town to the white men. I don't know how much they paid for it but I hope the deal turned out better than the New York scam where Peter Minuit paid $24 for the island of Manhattan to a tribe that didn't even own it.

I was first attracted to this business of offensive nicknames about 15 years ago when there was agitation to change the nickname of the Frisco, Texas, High School from "the Coons" to something more presentable in mixed company.

The team was known as the Coons ever since a student offered his pet raccoon to them as a mascot, but who has time to explain that when you are in the throes of a Frisco locomotive.

But the one that topped them all was the nickname then used by the high school in Wahpeton, North Dakota.

It was "the Wops."

The offensive name is merely a logical reduction of the name of the town, which, incidentally, is Indian in origin.

Nevertheless the team is now known as "the Huskies."

Health Notes

Being prepared for an emergency

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Reviewing recent articles on Global Warming; there's much heat, but little light. A recent quiz on global warning indicated that the temperature of the earth has actually been falling rather than rising while others predict that the world will boil over in 50 years. Well, we know that 10,000 years ago Cohasset was covered with ice. And we know that over the last several hundred years — since temperature records have been kept — temperatures have begun rising exponentially. We also know that the earth during formation, was pretty hot, and it's now cooler. It seems that the naysayers and the doom sayers are both quoting accurate statistics, but using different time horizons. We all seem to be reaching agreement that something is happening to our climate. Human nature being what it is, the world will probably wait until it's too late to do anything to remedy the situation.

The UN panel on climate change has just issued its third report, which says that diverting 0.3 percent of the world's productivity to available technologies for reducing CO2 emissions could forestall a global calamity. The Whitehouse Counsel on Environmental Quality has issued a comment endorsing the report but its Chairman says "certainly there is no leader in the world that is going to be pursuing a strategy that would drive their economies into deep depression." No, it's better to build 60,000 house trailers for New Orleans that nobody can use and fight, Don Quixote fashion, against windmills in Nantucket sound.

So, the Board of Health is opting for the imminently sensible approach of telling everyone to prepare. For what? – well, we'll probably have more mosquitoes, so we should prepare for that, and there may be a pandemic, so we should prepare for that. And we'll probably need more suntan lotion with bigger 'R' numbers, so we should add that to the list. And flooding with polluted water will probably increase, so there's that. And we're all trying to make less CO2 and that's a form of preparation. Really, how should we prepare?

There's a very complicated relationship between the timing of a calamity, its character, size and the response to it.

Last week, there was the continuation of an activity started some time ago aimed at helping to organize those South Shore towns who will be responsible for providing necessary services as an emergency becomes apparent. The South Shore Hospital held the third of its series of workshops called Partners in Emergency planning. Since the Hospital is nearby, and in an emergency, it may not be practical to get to Boston, several of us in Cohasset attend these summit meetings in addition to the region's greater Boston emergency activities. At the first meeting we swapped business cards and got to know those in other towns who have similar concerns. The second meeting was an analysis of the resources each town could bring to an emergency. This meeting was about how we would get the word out.

There's a very complicated relationship between the timing of a calamity, its character, size and the response to it. For example, in a calamity where wires come down, we may be glad we prepared by stocking up on firewood, a restorable resource. Perhaps the cell phone will work. And information, its content and timing are crucial to the down and dirty process of saving lives. There's an almost endless need for all types of information, which must be correct, unambiguous and timely. Public servants of all towns have already been trained to use a common language, management team structure, and vocabulary. At this meeting, the various media representatives were brought in to become informed about how they would participate. The Mariner, Ledger, TV and radio were all represented. The title of the session was "Communication, Triage and Incident Command Structure."

• Communication: When something happens and the phones start ringing at the police station, fire department, and Board of Health, it's show time, and all agencies should be giving the same answer.

• Triage: Generally there are three options in an emergency: Stay safely at home; go to a centrally located place where you'll be safe and finally: get specialized attention, treatment, etc. Such decisions can best be made by people who know the situation and have appropriate training. Making the decision from the available options is the triage process.

• Incident Command is an ad hoc command organizational structure practiced before hand and activated at the beginning of an incident. This year, there were two activations of elements of the incident command structure: one responding to a report of an aircraft crash in Whitney Woods; the other associated with a police chase going through town in which several areas in Town received a reverse 911 notification.

Free Training for Medical Reserve Corps

The Cohasset Board of Health continues to recruit and train volunteers for the Region 4B Medical Reserve Corps, a cadre of trained medical and non-medical professionals prepared to assist officials during an emergency. Training on Emergency Dispensing Sites (EDS) will be held for Medical Reserve Corps members and the public at 1 p.m., Monday May 14, in St. Anthony's Parish Center at 10 Summer St., in Cohasset.

Barbara Ceconi and Kurt Kuss of Access Umbrella will facilitate the class with members of the state and local Departments of Public Health to teach volunteers about setting up a mass prophylaxis operation, orient attendees to the function of the different stations in an EDS site and introduce the roles required to staff the stations.

Previous attendees of this training in other communities have had very positive experiences from this training, such as it promotes team work, and fosters an understanding of how an EDS would work as well as the roles that members of the community would fill.

"We were excited to see so much of a response from the community," said Alison Minkoff, Region 4B assistant emergency preparedness coordinator. "We're looking forward to this training and seeing more new faces."

While there are already nearly 2,300 volunteers in the regional Medical Reserve Corps, more are always being recruited. Anyone interested in joining the MRC is invited to attend this training or contact the Cohasset Board of Health.

You do not have to have attended an orientation to attend the May 14 training. To RSVP for the EDS training or for information on the Medical Reserve Corps, contact Alison Minkoff by calling 617-665-3702 or e-mailing Region4bMRC@challiance.org.

"It's a beautiful town and I want to keep it that way," Norman said. Her appointment was approved by the Board of Selectmen with a 4-0 vote.

Title I Grant for Fiscal 2008

Cohasset has received preliminary numbers from the federal government regarding a Department of Education Title I Grant, the estimated amount is over $22,000. Official numbers will not be received until the summer.

Business Manager Dave DeGennaro said that this grant is based on the poverty level of the town. Cohasset did not receive any money from this grant last year. He does not expect the number to change drastically between now and the final allocation notice this summer.

Political forum on gun control is May 16

The Cohasset Political Forum will hold its next session at 7 p.m., Wednesday, May 16, in the Paul Pratt Memorial Library at 35 Ripley Road. The topic will be "US Gun Laws, Gun Availability and Gun Control."

The featured speaker will be Cohasset Police Chief James Hussey, who will discuss the process for obtaining a legal firearm under Federal and Mass. law, with a comparison to laws of other states and nations. Other speakers may be added. A group discussion will follow, which will include a debate on the pros and cons of gun control measures.

Cook Estate hearing gets underway

On-site septic system planned

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

The intent of the developers is to transform the property located off Sohier Street into a 27-home community under the town's residential cluster development bylaw.

After a three-week continuance, the Cook Estate public hearing — with a complete Planning Board — began on Wednesday evening. Developers from Abbott Real Estate and Development, the owners of the property, presented the details of their project from drainage to building materials. This was the first of what will be a series of hearings on the development.

The 19-acre property, formerly owned by the late Jane Bancroft Cook, is now under the auspices of Abbott Development based in Boston. The intent of the developers is to transform the property located off Sohier Street into a 27-home community under the town's residential cluster development bylaw. The proposal requires a special permit from the Planning Board.

The plans presented were very much like the plans the Board reviewed at the preliminary hearing in February with slight changes to the site plan urged by the Conservation Commission and drainage considerations.

The hearing has been delayed for three weeks because the Planning Board was down to four members with the resignation of Peter Pratt. A joint vote of the Board of Selectmen and the remaining members of the Planning Board appointed Bill Good to the seat vacated by Pratt (see related story). Good will serve until the 2008 town election. He did not get a chance to ease back into the swing of things as the board jumped right into the Cook Estate hearing.

The 27 single family, free-standing homes proposed would be subject to a condo-type agreement.

Dale Harris, the site designer for the project, presented the drainage, utilities, traffic and general site plan for the proposed development. He said that some changes had been made after a meeting with the Conservation Commission to review the plans in relation to wetlands. At the Commission's request Harris said they moved some units away from the buffer zone, giving the nearby wetlands a 110-foot buffer zone.

"There will be very minimal impact from the development onto Sohier Street," Harris said as he described the stormwater management and runoff design of the development. He said that best management practices were followed for stormwater according to government regulations. On-site septic systems will include four leeching field areas, chosen for their soil and best perc rates, Harris said.

However, a hydrologist representing the nearby Stop & Shop Plaza found flaws in the project plans, especially in relation to possible off-site flooding impacts. Jerome Carr from Carr Research Laboratory brought up concerns that the data used to calculate rainfall was too low, especially for major storms.

"We can't be too conservative on those numbers," said Planning Board member Mike Westcott, citing ongoing town-wide flooding and stormwater issues.

Carr also cited concerns with the flow capacity of the catch basins, detentions basins, and off-site flow. The Planning Board requested that its consultant, John Modzelewski, review the plans and work with the developers on these issues.

Traffic

Abbott developers have done traffic studies on Sohier Street to estimate the impact the development will have on traffic. The results were that 33 cars would be added to Sohier Street traffic during peak hours (4-6p.m.). Harris indicated that this impact was minor.

The Planning Board was concerned that the entirety and unique situation of Sohier Street was not completely taken into account. The presence of two schools and the summer concerts at the Music Circus make Sohier Street an often a heavily trafficked roadway. Another concern was the impact the development might have on the intersection of Sohier St. and Route 3A that often gets backed up during peak hours. Chairman Al Moore pointed out the difficulty of making a left turn onto 3A from Sohier St.

"What I'm getting at is Sohier Street may have to become a controlled intersection," said Planning Board member Bob Sturdy. They suggested the traffic specialist go back and do another study on the effects the development may have on that busy intersection and look at the surrounding area traffic flows.

Next, the hearing dove into landscape and architectural matters. Landscape architect Joseph Geller, a partner at Geller DeVellis Landscape Architects, told the board that the landscape design is meant to be as naturalized and low maintenance as possible.

Plantings will be for the most part native to the area and low maintenance to reduce watering. Low impact drainage methods have been incorporated throughout the site. The driveways will be constructed of a pervious surface called "eco-stone" to allow for water to run into the ground and not the road. Gellar said that the roadway was a minimum width to limit impervious area that often can add runoff to a site or around a site.

The surrounding area will be common land and have meadow areas, a gazebo and extensive walking trails. The hilltop locale yields some far-reaching views.

"We positioned the homes so they have the best views possible" and not into a neighbor's home, said Gellar. Abbott currently has four different options for home designs and most lots can accommodate two possible options so the buyer can choose. The configuration and window placement of the homes also took into account available sunlight.

Gellar presented the different lighting fixtures that will be used throughout the sight, which he said would all be down lit and dark sky compliant. Although there may be a "cast of light" seen from the bottom of the hill near the schools, Gellar assured the Board that it would not be a bright glow like there is in a parking lot.

The homes will be "architecturally similar in terms of material"— with clapboard and shingle, in a variety of soft tones — but will have "great variation on the interior," said Gellar. The homes will vary in size from 2,200 to 2,800 square feet. Although final price points have not been set, the developers said that the homes would be in the $750,000 to $800,000 range.

Some concerns were raised by Captain Mark Trask of the Fire Department both on the size of the roadway, the reported hydrant pressure, and the entrance and emergency access ways. Currently, the plans show a 20-foot wide roadway, which will be one way and have parking for residents and a 22-foot wide main road.

"Let's give it a little more room for the future," said Sturdy who pointed out that it is unlikely the Fire Department will buy a smaller ladder truck in the future so just making it might not cut it in a few years.

The purchase of the Cook estate also included a parcel of the land on the north, or Fairoaks Lane, side of Sohier Street. The developers said they do not plan to develop that lot and would be willing to place a conservation restriction on that property.

The Abbott Developers are applying for a special permit under the residential cluster development district, which allows for homes to be built closer together with open space on the edges. Despite the "cluster" of homes, there will be no more units built than would be allowed under normal subdivision.

The developers will lead the Planning Board in a site walk on Wednesday, May 23 beginning at 6:30p.m. The public hearing will resume at 7 p.m. Members of the public are welcome to attend both meetings.

Planning board member is good to go

Appointed to Peter Pratt's seat

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

Good comes to the board with 15 years of Planning Board experience after serving for three terms. He decided not to run for reelection in 2004.

A joint vote between the Board of Selectmen and Planning Board unanimously appointed William Good to the fill a vacancy on the Planning Board. Member Peter Pratt resigned from his post two weeks ago. A notice was posted on the Town website seeking candidates for the Planning Board seat and Good was the only citizen to come forward. Good will sit on the board until the next town election.

"We're at a point right now that we have very big stuff coming down on us," Moore said, referring to two large projects that will require approval of special permits in the next year — the Cook Estate cluster development and the TOD (Transit-Oriented Development Overlay District). Both permits require a "super majority" of four out of five members agreeing for approval, if there is not a full board. That requirement would hinder the board if one member was not present for a public hearing.

Good comes to the board with 15 years of Planning Board experience after serving for three terms. He decided not to run for reelection in 2004.

"It sounded like there was a need for a full board quickly," Good said after his first meeting back on the Planning Board, "I think I have the experience to jump into the big issues quickly."

Selectman Fred Koed indicated that he had two issues with the appointment that he would like to discuss. First, he saw a potential conflict of interest with Good, a licensed real estate broker.

"If there is a conflict of interest, he will recuse himself," Moore said, adding that at some point over the years each member of the Planning Board has had to recuse himself because of a conflict of interest.

"[Good] is an honorable man so I don't anticipate any problems," said Moore. The Abbott developers, who are proposing the Cook Estate development, will be doing their own marketing and selling of the homes. Moore indicated that that would eliminate a conflict for that permit.

Koed also addressed what he said was a process issue where residents were not given ample opportunity to apply for the position. A resident had called Koed with concern that the appointment of Good was a "done deal" from the beginning.

"It's in the public interest, even if state does not require more than a week" to have a longer posting period to give interested residents a chance to apply, said Koed. During the week timeframe no other citizens applied for the Planning Board's vacant seat.

Planning Board member Stuart Ivimey indicated that in recent years there has been no races for Planning Board seats and the candidates have run uncontested. In the most recent election Moore ran unopposed.

"We're not a position to have a new person come on the board," said Moore, "during the first year, [a member] is not a whole lot of service to the board," as he/she learns the Planning Board processes. Moore said the Board was fortunate to have a candidate with experience that was willing to serve for the remainder of the year.

Good hopes to bring a sense of logic and reason, along with his knowledge, to the board as they tackle developments that will affect the town for years to come.

"I have no intention of running [for Planning Board] again—it's great for one year," Good said, " this is a busy chapter of the Planning Board."

All four remaining members of the Planning Board voted to appoint Good, while the Board of Selectmen voted 4-0. Selectman Ralph Dormitzer was not present.

special permit to reconfigure the building into two retail spaces and four apartments. They walked away with a continuance of their special permit hearing and advice to apply for a variance.

"We're ready to go here," said Jim Watson, "We're moving ahead in quite a positive way."

Although it seemed the Zoning Board was not adverse to the Watsons' proposal, it is bound to abide by the zoning bylaws. One of those bylaws says that there can be apartments, or multi-family dwellings, in conjunction with retail in the Village Business district with a special permit. The Watsons were applying for that special permit.

However, that special permit is subject to another bylaw that requires that the building lot be over 40,000 square feet. In order to get around that bylaw, the zoning board would have to issue a variance, which is a more stringent application process. A variance would grant relief of the zoning bylaw for the applicant.

"Our building is pretty prominent in town," said Jim Watson.

"The longer it stays empty, the worse it's going to be for the town," added Tina Watson. With the hardware store closed as of May 1, the building is now vacant.

The existing structure has one retail space, the hardware store, on the first floor. The second and third floors have typically been used for storage. The Watsons are proposing a reconfiguration of the first floor to be split into two retail spaces and the other floors to be converted into four apartments.

They presented designs that included all one-bedroom apartments. Two apartments would be townhouse style split between the second and third floor. One would be a studio apartment, solely on the second floor. The fourth apartment would be on the third floor, with a roof deck, and would have its entrance on the second floor. The existing structure from the outside would not be changed, with exception of new windows and shingling.

The hearing for the special permit has been continued to June 6. The Watsons will likely appear again on that date to seek for a variance.

Jim Watson expressed frustration that his building, and many others in the village district, would never fit into zoning bylaws. The Cohasset Hardware building covers 98 percent of the lot — there are no setbacks, or other traditional zoning regulations. Like many other buildings in town, Cohasset Hardware was built before zoning bylaws were instituted in the 1950s.

"For pre-existing, non-conforming buildings you can write zoning bylaws all day long but they will never apply to my building," said Jim Watson, "we need to make exceptions."

The Zoning Board suggested that the Watsons reapply for a variance. They went through the five additional questions they would need to be able to address and argue for during the variance hearing. In April 2000 Cohasset Hardware building got Zoning Board approval for two two-bedroom apartments split between the second and third floors. That configuration had the same number of bedrooms (four) as the current plan, and the Zoning Board said that if the Watsons' had gone through with their plan at that time it would have been allowed.

"We're interested in doing one-bedroom apartments so they do not tax the schools," said Jim Watson. Two-bedroom apartments open the door for families with children to move to town.

Bob Sturdy, senior member of the Planning Board, said that the Zoning Board was reading the bylaw a little too narrowly.

"When zoning went into play, these buildings were already existing," Sturdy said, indicating that a special permit is supposed to give the town control over apartments, but not prohibit them.

"It's a unique district," said Sturdy and that special permits could and should be granted if they did not adversely affect the downtown area, "it's essential for a viable downtown to get two businesses into the hardware store."

Sturdy indicated that the village area has a "big threat" on the horizon with the TOD (Transit-Oriented Overlay District) off Route 3A that could detract from the viability of the village district.

"They need relief now," he said.

Another issue that seemed to hinder the proposal was the inclusion of an apartment solely on the third floor. A zoning bylaw prohibits apartments on the third floor of a dwelling. Part of the dwelling unit would need to be located on the second floor, either a bedroom or living area. If the plan is kept the way it is, the Zoning Board indicated the Watsons' may need two variances — one to overcome the 40,000 square foot lot restriction for multi-family dwelling units and one for the third floor apartment.

"If you have only one variance it will be an easier time," said Chairman of Zoning Board of Appeals Woody Chittick, "you probably have a pretty good shot at proving you have a right for a variance" to add apartments to the building.

The Zoning Board indicated that if the Watsons had the proper building permits in place they could go forward with renovating the first floor to prepare it for two new retail spaces. The hearing for the special permit has been continued to June 6. The Watsons will likely appear again on that date to seek for a variance.

Boys tennis showdown with Norwell set for Tuesday

By Mark Goodman
MGOODMAN@CNC.COM

With Tuesday's team match already in the books, Carver's Eddie Hoey and Cohasset's Victor Hartmann were still plugging away, deep into the warm afternoon at the Milliken tennis courts.

Just when one player appeared to have the upper hand, the other came back and took control. It was a first singles match destined for a third set tiebreaker, and that's exactly what happened.

And it was Hoey who came up big in that tiebreaker, winning it 7-1 to earn the Crusaders' lone point in Cohasset's 4-1 win.

After breaking Hartmann's serve to go up 5-4 in the third set, Hoey served for the match, but did himself in with a couple double faults to end the game. Hartmann then took four of five points in the next game, including an ace, to go up 6-5.

Hoey came back and held serve himself, including an ace of his own, to set the stage for his tiebreaker. After going through the ups and downs of the match with his player, Carver coach Roger King was proud of Hoey's performance in a 7-6 (7-4), 3-6, 7-6 (7-1) win.

"It was a great match and a great win for Eddie," King said. "He's looking for an (South Shore League) All-Star berth and he may've sewn it up right there."

Cohasset coach Paul Carroll was also complimentary of his top player, saying, "Victor is showing great promise. He plays hard. All year long he's been facing sturdy competition, and he's been doing well."

The rest of the day's matches were two-setters in favor of Cohasset. Skippers senior Blain Morin topped Carver senior Tom Piepiora at second singles, 6-0, 7-5, while junior Ryan Crough bested senior Joe Kaminski by the same score.

"I was pleased with how our second and third singles both

Midgame speech starts Tuesday's comeback win over Carver

Things were not looking good for the Cohasset High softball team halfway through Tuesday's game against Carver.

The Skippers found themselves on the wrong side of an 8-3 score after four innings, and it could have been worse considering the team had committed a whopping nine errors to that point.

It was the lack of focus on defense that pushed head coach Deb Bostwick over the edge.

"That's just sad. I was beside myself at that point," she said. "I just said to the girls, 'Do you want to get on the bus now? Or do you want to fight back?'"

The Skippers got the message, ripping off 12 runs over the next three innings to Carver's zero, and Cohasset came away with a 15-8 win vital to its hopes of qualifying for the Div. 3 state tournament.

The turning point came in the top of the fifth, when the bottom of the order sparked a five-run rally to tie the game. Freshman Meredith Kelly reached on a Carver error, and went to third when sophomore catcher Kristin Monaco followed with a double. The Crusaders infield bungled a bunt by freshman centerfielder Christine Coner, allowing Kelly

The Skippers celebrate their big win over Scituate last Thursday.

Skippers get the last laugh – again

Laxers nip archrival Scituate, 11-10

By Mark Goodman
MGOODMAN@CNC.COM

SCITUATE - Another encounter, another last minute nail-biter between the Scituate and Cohasset boys lacrosse teams.

As if one would expect anything less.

Once again, though, it was the Skippers that came out on top, holding on for an 11-10 win at SHS field last Thursday evening.

Cohasset junior midfielder PJ McCaw appeared to put the game away with 3:24 remaining, when his goal made it 11-8 in favor of the visitors. Junior Mark Flibotte and sophomore Andrew Smith had also scored within the previous four minutes to break an 8-8 tie.

But the Sailors showed resolve in making one final comeback. After junior goalie Jake Gray made one of his 10 second half saves (14 total) to keep it a three-goal game, Scituate went on the attack, and senior middy Sam Brigham scored with 2:16 left to cut Cohasset's lead to two.

Cohasset controlled the ensuing face-off, but Sailors junior defenseman Ryan Woodford made a critical check behind Gray's net to force a turnover. With 44 seconds left, Scituate senior middy Gary Crowley scored to draw his team within one.

After a timeout, Scituate junior Pat Mahoney did enough on the next face-off to allow Crowley to scoop up the ball on the run and fly down the middle of the field toward Cohasset's net. Crowley made an unabated run toward the cage and fired in a hard, low shot that Sailors fans surely expected to tie the game.

But Cohasset junior goalie Nate Porter had other ideas, came back and played tough second sets," King said.

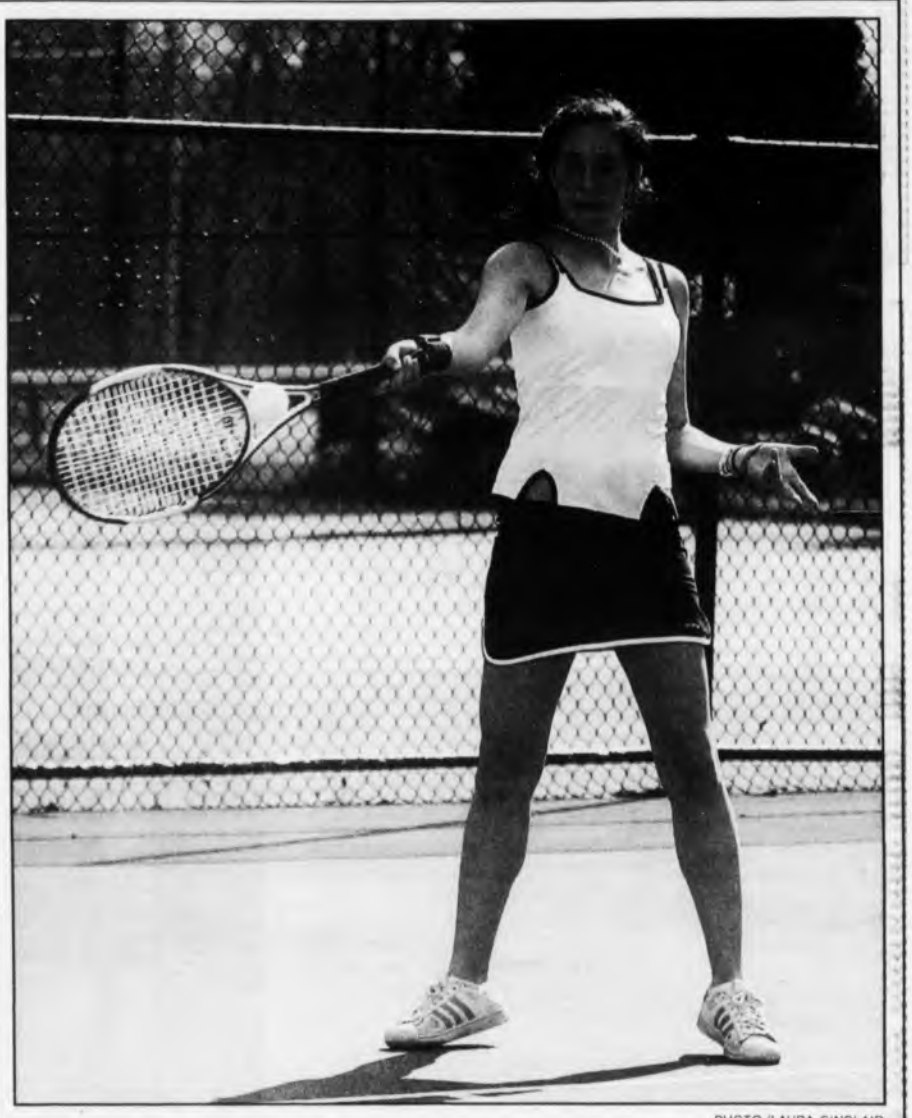
At first doubles, senior Chris Donze and sophomore Ivan Sceery earned a 6-3, 6-4 win for Cohasset over Carver junior Stefan Adams and sophomore John Davis. At second doubles, senior Chris Ackley and freshman Mike Filbey scored a 6-3, 6-1 win over junior Shawn Bohlin and sophomore Jack Nickerson.

"Chris Ackley and Mike Filbey are getting stronger and stronger at doubles for us," Skippers coach Brian Hill said. "Chris has been especially dominating at net and with his volleys."



Both teams were playing their second match in as many days. Cohasset (8-3 overall, 5-1 South Shore League) scored a 4-1 win in Abington, led by Morin (6-1, 6-3) and Hartmann (6-0, 6-3) atop the singles lineup. The first doubles team of Ackley and Owen Stevenson won 7-5, 6-2, while Luke Brewer and Marc D'Antonio dropped just one game in a dominant second doubles performance.

Carver (2-9) faced a far tougher task against undefeated Norwell and lost, 5-0. Kaminski and the doubles teams made things somewhat difficult for their Clipper opponents, a sign of progress for King.

"We're improving," he said. "We're just running out of time."

After facing a talented Cape Cod Academy team Thursday afternoon, the Crusaders travel to Mashpee (Monday) and Abington (Tuesday), with both matches scheduled for 3:30 p.m.

Thursday the Skippers hosted Harwich and have a big showdown Tuesday at Norwell before hosting Cape Cod Academy the following afternoon at 4. The Skippers will be looking to avenge its only league loss of the season against Norwell, who won the teams' first match, 5-0, April 30.

CHS struggles during 5-game losing streak

By Eric MacCarthy
CORRESPONDENT

The Cohasset High baseball team is now only one loss from being eliminated from tournament contention after a five-game losing streak.Instead of looking to extend their season these Skippers appear more concerned with getting through this season and looking forward to a much better season next year.

The struggles continued last Friday against East Bridgewater, who is in first place in the South Shore League. Once again, the Skippers' bats were nowhere to be find as Cohasset was shut out, 9-0. The offense had only two hits the entire game, one by junior Kyle Pinkus and the other by fellow junior Pat Doonan, who also had a stolen base.

"We're inconsistent defensively, and these past two games, we've just been very poor."
Cohasset baseball coach
Al Gallotta

The starter for Cohasset was junior Brian Hill, who pitched five innings. In those five innings Hill gave up only four earned runs on nine hits. He also gave up three walks and had three strikeouts. As a staff, Cohasset pitching gave up a total of 15 hits to EB.

"In all of my years coaching that was one of the only times I've ever seen a high school team get 15 hits," said head coach Al Gallotta. "That's a whole lot."

Abington, a team that has been struggling this season and only beat Cohasset by one in their first meeting, also took advantage of Cohasset's slump as they were able to win 11-5 on Monday. For the first time in a while the Skippers' offense showed some real signs of life. Although they were not able to capitalize on all their opportunities, the Skippers did have 10 hits in the ballgame. Four of those hits came from junior Dave Snowdale, who had three singles and a triple, driving in two runs. Doonan also had two hits for the second straight game.

Junior Sam DeGiacomo was the starter for the Skippers against the Green Wave and he struggled immensely. DeGiacomo gave up 14 hits in only five innings. In those five innings, although only six were earned, he gave up all 11 runs in the loss.

Cohasset lost again the following day, this time to the Carver Crusaders, 10-3. The Skippers' offense went back to its normal ways as they only scored three runs. Pinkus, along with sophomore John Sturino, both led the team with two hits.

The story of the game though was senior John Harrington making his first start of the year on the mound for the Skippers. Harrington pitched well, giving up a mere two earned runs on eight hits in five innings pitched. His performance was something that the rest of Cohasset's pitchers have not been able to do on a consistent basis.

Much like last year, the Cohasset Skippers' defense has been anything but spectacular. Although in the first half of the season it appeared the defense had improved, in all actuality they have continued to struggle. In their last two games the Skippers have totaled 10 errors.

"We're inconsistent defensively, and these past two games, we've just been very poor," said Gallotta.

That may be an understatement, as of the 75 runs Cohasset has allowed so far this season, 33 have been unearned.

After hosting Harwich Thursday in a game played after the Mariner went to press, the Skippers begin next week with two road games at Hull (Monday) and Norwell (Tuesday). Both are scheduled to begin at 3:30 p.m.

and Monaco to score as Coner went all the way to third.

Sophomore shortstop Carly Salerno plated Coner with an RBI single and advanced to third when Carver misplayed a shot off the bat of sophomore Brittany Dunn. Sophomore Carly Zappolo then hit a single to center to score two runs and tie the game.

At that point, Bostwick said the entire team's mood changed, and it showed when they scored four more runs in the sixth and three in the seventh. Meanwhile, senior Christina Pinkus retired nine of the final 10 batters she faced to pick up the win on the mound.

The victory broke a three-game losing streak to Carver, East Bridgewater and Abington, during which the Skippers scored just six runs. Still, with a 5-8 record and seven games left to play, Cohasset stands a decent chance at making postseason play.

After traveling to Harwich Thursday in a game played after the Mariner went to press, the girls host Hull (Monday) and Norwell (Tuesday) to begin next week. It's on to Mashpee on Thursday before three games the final week of the season: a home-and-away with Holbrook and a home game against Hanover in the May 24 season finale.

Stone, Middlebury advance to D3 quarterfinals

Cohasset's Elizabeth Stone (CHS Class of '05) and her Middlebury (Vt.) College women's tennis teammates have advanced to the final eight of the NCAA Division 3 tournament.

Middlebury (13-4) will play Washington and Lee (Va.) University this Tuesday in Fredericksburg, Va. for the right to advance to Wednesday's semifinal.

A four-year standout for Cohasset High School, Stone has continued her success in the college circuit. She and doubles partner Elizabeth Emery have won both their matches in the opening rounds against Vassar and Bowdoin. Stone was also ahead in her singles match in both contests when they were called due to Middlebury having already won the team match.

making a wonderful kick save and controlling the rebound to maintain the Skippers' advantage. Cohasset was then able to run out the clock and come away with a win in the latest exciting chapter of the rivalry between these two teams.

"Gary had a good-looking shot there, but Nate made a nice save," said Scituate head coach Rick Bagby. "Gary went to the right spot to get his shot off, but Nate anticipated it well."

Cohasset head coach Stew Curran, meanwhile, was not surprised to see the Sailors make it interesting in the closing minutes despite his team taking that late three-goal lead.

"They're a resilient team and they don't accept mediocrity, as long as Rick is in charge, they're going to compete and do well."

Cohasset head coach Stew Curran on Scituate

"They're a resilient team and they don't accept mediocrity," Curran said of Scituate. "As long as Rick is in charge, they're going to compete and do well."

The Sailors showed that competitive fire at the end of the first half, as well. Cohasset junior Mike Grimm scored with 5:22 remaining in the half to give the Skippers a 6-3 lead. At that point, Cohasset had scored five the game's last six goals, with Flibotte scoring twice and seniors Chris Davis and Jeff Brown both scoring once during the run. Brown and fellow senior Mike Bunstein helped out with assists.

On the other end, Scituate was showing little punch on offense. One reason was Cohasset's air-tight man defense, particularly Brown on Crowley. The Sailors were simply unable to get the ball in the sticks of their playmakers.

Another reason for that, though, was sloppiness on the part of the Sailors. Passing, catching and clearing proved difficult at times, with Scituate committing several silly turnovers.

"We were jittery; we had a lot of nervous energy," Bagby said. "I think we played sloppy at times because of that. When we got the ball settled, we were scary."

That was the case in the last four minutes of the first half, during which Scituate dug in and ripped off four unanswered goals to take a 7-6 lead into halftime. Senior Nick Stella and Mahoney scored the first two, with Crowley notching the last two.

"We said to them at halftime, 'If you play like you did in that second quarter, they can't beat you,'" Bagby said. "But you have to replicate it, and they didn't do it."

Indeed, things slowed down in the third period, with the teams combining for just three goals. In addition to the work from both goalies, Woodford and Cohasset senior Bobby Meikleham both played well with the long stick for their respective teams.

Looking at the final scoresheet, Flibotte led all players with five goals. Grimm was the Skippers' only other multiple-goal scorer with two, while Bunstein again played the playmaker role to a tee with four assists.

For Scituate, Crowley finished with a team-high three goals, followed by Stella and Brigham with two each. Sophomore Kyle Crowley had one goal and three assists.

Skippers attackman Mike Bunstein storms toward the Sailors' net. The Cohasset senior had four assists in his team's narrow victory.

COHASSET YOUTH LACROSSE

U15 White

The U15 Whites had a tight contest in Marshfield this week, with both sides showing some strong offensive and defensive sets. Charlie Neaves (one goal, two assists) and Thomas Flibotte (four goals) led the way for Cohasset. Marshfield - having a large team in numbers - kept fresh lines and struck back to go ahead 3-2 at the half. Kyle Healy, who finished with 20 saves, made some awesome saves in tight quarters as his Ministers of Defense (Dean McNary, Geoff Swain and Sam Leahy) had their hands full as well. McNary also provided two assists.

Cohasset came out strong in the second half and really pressed Marshfield with John McGoldrick (one goal) leading the way. McGoldrick was strong on face-offs and created many transitional plays. Mitch McNary (two goals) stormed the net repeatedly with Dean McNary and Flibotte. Danny Czerkowski (one assist), Pete McKenna, Graydon Foley, James McElvey and Sam Richardson all pressured the Marshfield attack while posting some very long minutes as well. Cohasset found the posts and crossbars many times in a fury of shots throughout the contest. Flibotte hit the bars at least 7 times.

The mojo wasn't in the cards for the Whites in this one though as they fell in a hard fought battle, 9-8. Don't miss next weeks contest at home against. Duxbury.

U13 Blue

Cohasset U13-Blue hosted its second home game of the season playing an athletic and motivated Sandwich team. Under a beautiful sun-filled sky, the boys played a competitive game. Control of the game flowed back and forth between both squads, with Cohasset's goaltending from Matts Nelson (first half) and Tommy Powers (second half) being a major factor in limiting Sandwich's scoring.

The first half ended with Sandwich up 5-2. Cohasset had trouble maintaining ball possession, and as a result had limited possessions. Cole Kissick scored off a nice feed from Henry Brown. Powers scored an unassisted goal.

The second half began with Cohasset continuing to have limited ball possession, but a committed team defense kept the game within reach at 6-2 at the end of the third quarter.

Cohasset came alive in the fourth as the team dominated the play. However, the rally fell short and Sandwich held on for a 7-5 win. Ryan McKeon, Golden and Andrew Fontaine scored in the fourth. Nelson assisted on Golden's goal.

Next up for the squad is an away game against Marshfield this Sunday.

U13 White

The U13 boys White team played at Marshfield last weekend. Marshfield came out like gangbusters and managed to trade blows with its rivals to keep the score notched evenly throughout the first half. Unfortunately for Cohasset the hometown team scored some quick transitional goals in the second half giving it a strong lead going into the final quarter.

The real victory for the Cohasset kids was how well they kept their heads in the game after falling behind by a five-goal margin late in the third quarter. Cohasset rallied to "win" the fourth quarter by shutting out its opponent, while putting several goals in the net to close the gap.

John Mills and Conor Green shared the goaltending duties, both making their fair share of saves and backing up the defensive corps led by "double-duty" Mark Brown. Axel Seppala and Alex Kent continued their fine play on the offensive side of the ball, while Zach Coggins really came into his own transitioning the ball on midfield with assists from Jimmy (Cole) Maher, Neil Durham, and Nick and Dan Tangherlini.

Though a disappointing loss in the end, the kids never gave up and battled hard to the very end to come out on top of another great day of lacrosse.

U13 Black

Lax season has arrived for U13 Black. The attack unit of Max Montgomery, Colin Whelan and Charlie Steele dominated the Plymouth defense. Montgomery recorded five goals and two assists, while Whelan added four goals and two assists. Steele made countless key assists, passes and shot recoveries for the Black.

On the other side of the field, Jack Conte made 14 saves in net. Conte served as goaltender for the entire game, a tremendous display of sportsmanship and dedication to his team. The defensive unit of Jack McElgunn, Jack Stanganelli and Teddy Patsos thwarted the offensive drives of Plymouth. McElgunn perfected a new clearing play that directly contributed to five or six goals.

Foster Eymer, Devin Kennedy, Will Lucas, Anthony Nahill and Jack Leffel provided great offensive and defensive plays from the middle of the field despite being shorthanded. Matt MacCormick and Joe Silvia scored to extend the lead. Hunter Forrer made a "piper" that was heard in Duxbury, grabbed that loose ball and fired a shot into the net. A feat never recorded in youth lacrosse as far as Cohasset knows.

U11 Blue

The U11 Blue boys got outgunned 15-5 last weekend in what was the toughest game of the season so far. Against what seemed to be a team balanced toward experienced fourth graders, Cohasset simply could win the face-off and stop the fast break. To be fair, nine of Whitman's 15 goals came from two players. Another two came from another, but it was obvious that the Whitman squad won at the midfield line and simply ran over the Cohasset defense.

In the first half Cohasset's Matt Froio cleared the ball and recorded a goal. Liam McHugh also added a great goal. Curtis Golden was tough on the midfield and at attack. He had a great feed from Ben Buckley, but a good check by Whitman forced the shot wide. Another great combination by Davis Cronin to Michael Lund was close but the shot was denied by a strong opposing defense. A good effort by Brian Counihan and a breakout day for Hayes Keniley on defense turned back a number of strong drives. Harry Seraikas had a few great clears as the game progressed.

The second half was a better, more coordinated effort by the Cohasset squad. Although Whitman continued to score with its three strong players breaking to Cohasset's goal, the Cohasset team played its game, oriented toward team effort, positioning and passing to open players. Graham Schwandt and Tim Hayes started to shine in the third quarter with solid clears to the Cohasset offense. Connor Naughton was very tough as defensive middie and teamed with Ross Erler supporting a few good turnarounds at the defensive side of the field.

Jeff Powers combined speed and great dodging skills to link together two scoring drives to the goal. Sam Murphy was also hot at midfield clears and defense. Charlie DeVries also mixed it up with two good ground balls wins.

U11 White

The White U11 Cohasset lacrosse team battled it out in the trenches with Marshfield last weekend. Marshfield had a very good squad and the game was close, and up for grabs unitl the bitter end when Cohasset pulled away for an 8-6 victory. Connor Hayden opened up the scoring at midfield and then added a second goal, which unfortunately was wiped out due to a technical foul by Cohasset with too many players on the field. Martin Buckley enjoyed his biggest output of the season by turning in his first hat trick from midfield as well.

After a few quick scores, the game turned into a hard fought defensive battle with the ball going up and down both ends of the field with great transition and outstanding goal tending by both teams. Owen Kefallinos, who put on the chest protector for the first time, played outstanding recording nine saves including two at point blank; one of which bounced off his helmet and the other off his shoulder as he jumped toward the ball to deflect the shot.

Midfield and defense were solid for most of the game constantly stripping the ball from Marshfield and forcing it to shoot from the outside and clearing the ball downfield. Jack Donohue, Ian Kennedy, Mike Yerardi, Justin Fein, Cameron Steele, Nick Lydon, Christian Lydon, Luke O'Brien, Max Fitzgerald and Jake Burchill all put in big defensive efforts. On one play Fitzgerald made an overpowering stick check on a Marshfield player, scooped up the ground ball at midfield, and drove to the net just missing the cage.

Dan Axelson put up a score from midfield and continued his fast breaks and super defense. Ryan McElhinney was also a force Sunday helping Cohasset to control the ball with his great stick work and speed.

The attack also came up big again with Adam Benson netting a score and dazzling the crowd with his stick work. A.J. Kucinski netted an assist and a full field fast break goal while on midfield to put Cohasset up by two late in the game to seal the victory. Sean Mavilia just missed a goal following a difficult catch from a teammate and also showed very good stick work. Cole Morrison notched his fourth goal of the season and was instrumental in the victory. Owen Burchill is becoming a major factor in the offense as he once again demonstrated his skills on the field and keeping the ball in Cohasset sticks. And finally, Levante Haber put in another strong performance keeping the Marshfield defense running and wearing it down.

Patriots' Faulk and Brockton Rox set to play for United Way

By Matt Futrell
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

BROCKTON - Kevin Faulk has dodged countless tacklers on his way to acquiring three Super Bowl rings as a member of the New England Patriots. The veteran running back wasn't dodging any questions at a Brockton press conference recently to promote the Kevin Faulk Celebrity Softball Game coming to Campanelli Stadium Saturday, May 12.

"Is this something you would like to plan annually?" asked a local radio host.

"When you do something well, you try to do it in threes." Faulk answered.

The glistening Super Bowl rings were pretty convincing.

Dressed in a pinstriped Brockton Rox jersey, Faulk, a second-round draft pick of the New England Patriots in 1999, wrapped his hands around a baseball bat as he announced details for the Kevin Faulk Celebrity Softball Game at Campanelli Stadium. Proceeds from the event will benefit the United Way of Acadiana in his hometown of Lafayette, Louisiana, in a continued effort to aid the victims of Hurricane Katrina.

The Celebrity Softball Game will feature former and current Patriots including star running back Laurence Maroney, defensive tackle Vince Wilfork, and newly acquired wide receiver Wes Welker.

The game is scheduled to begin at 7:05 p.m. following a VIP tailgate party at The Shaw's Center, adjacent to Campanelli Stadium, beginning at 5 p.m.

The game is scheduled to begin at 7:05 p.m. following a VIP tailgate party at The Shaw's Center, adjacent to Campanelli Stadium, beginning at 5 p.m. Fans purchasing a VIP ticket will have the opportunity to meet the celebrities on each roster as well as enjoy an open spirits bar, passed hors d'oeuvres, and a silent auction of premier sports memorabilia. VIP Package tickets are $100 and also include a game ticket. General admission tickets are also available for $10.

At the press conference announcing the event, Faulk stressed the importance of continuing to help the victims who lost their homes, and still struggle to this day to regain their lives. "It's still far from being over. They have the funds and everything, but they're not home yet." He continued, "I was a spokesman for United Way of Acadiana, and I just took this opportunity to help them and ran with it."

"The Rox were ready for this," he said, "and they gave us every opportunity to make this happen. When I came to this stadium I was very overwhelmed. It was my first time at Campanelli Stadium and I loved it, and I said, 'This is where we're going to have the event.'"

Rox Assistant GM Brian Voelkel says the team is thrilled to partner with Faulk and his teammates.

"Kevin's passion and excitement to help the United Way is infectious. The Rox pride themselves on giving back to the community. In this case, we have an opportunity to help a community that produced a player and a person that has meant a lot to New England sports fans and we're happy to be invited to the party."

In addition to the Celebrity Softball Game, Kevin Faulk and friends will hold a gala event May 11 at 8 p.m. at 33 Restaurant & Lounge in Boston to raise money for Untied Way of Massachusetts Bay and Acadiana.

VIP and general admission tickets for the Kevin Faulk Celebrity Softball Tournament are available through the Rox Ticket Office at 508-559-7070, or online at: www.brocktonrox.com.

Evan's Run set for May 20

The 7th annual Evan's Run in Norwell is scheduled for Sunday, May 20.

The event, which features races for kids and adults alike, is named after Evan Henry, a Norwell native who passed away in July of 2000 at the age of 11.

Evan was autistic, and the Henry family decided soon after his passing to set up a foundation that raises funds for organizations that help autistic children like Evan. Thus, the Evan Henry Foundation was born. Proceeds from the event will go toward the foundation. To date, the race has raised over $185,000 for autistic children and their families.

Those interesting in participating can register online at www.evansrun.com, or at the pre-registration event the day before the race, May 19, from noon to 5 p.m. at Norwell High School. Runners can still register the morning of the race, but are strongly encouraged to do so beforehand. The cost to register is $10 for kids races, $20 for the main races.

Runners will also be able to pick up their bib number and timing chip on the 19th.

The children's races run from 8:30 to 9:30 a.m. There is a 200-meter event for kids 5-and-under at no charge. There will be a quarter-mile race for kids ages 6-8, and separate one-mile runs for kids ages 9 and 10, 11 and 12, and 13-15.

The main events start at 10:30 a.m., featuring 5K and 10K runs, as well as a 5K walk. The first 600 runners that sign up for these events will receive a free t-shirt.

Limited parking is available at Norwell High School, which serves as the starting and finishing point for all events. Runners can also park at the Hanover Mall, where there will be a shuttle to take you to the race.

As in years past, there will be live music and free food and drinks at the race grounds. There will also be a post-race party at McGreal's Tavern in Norwell Center, also included in the registration cost.

For more information about the race and the Evan Henry Foundation, log on to www.evansrun.com or call the race hotline at (617)347-2068.

Prom, graduation just around the corner

LIFE AT CHS

MICHAEL CORRY

It's almost that time again, Cohasset. Prom is just around the corner, and graduation isn't far behind. That also means another chapter of Life at CHS is coming to an end. No worries — you're in good hands. I've lined up a replacement, whom I'll introduce next week.

Spider-Man 3 is out, and aside from cool special effects and a funny scene involving pie, it's terrible. Six movies are planned, and it looks like Sony has all its efforts focused on churning out a product, even if it's sub-par. Luckily, we can all look forward to the third Pirates of the Caribbean movie, premiering at the end of the month.

The school has started to heat up…it seems the rising temperatures may be contributing to rising tempers, because the student body is pretty irritable. Understandably so, wouldn't you be grouchy if you were stuck in school when it's this nice out?

Chill out guys, we're almost there. Here's this week's news to take the edge off.

• Prom Tickets go on sale next Monday for $40!

• All incoming 10th graders are required to have the immunizations up to date and a current physical on file in the Nurse's Office, prior to the start of the 2007-2007 school year. Letters were sent home to students who are missing immunizations or who need to update their physical. If you received a letter, please mail all the information to Mrs. Collins at the High School prior to June 15th

• Monday AP Government and Politics had their exam.

• Monday night the American Musical Theater met in the Auditorium.

• The Wrestling Boosters met in the library Monday night.

• Tuesday the AP Spanish exam was taken.

• The Professional Development Committee met Tuesday after school.

• Wednesday AP Calculus took their exam.

• Wednesday was a half day! The half day is an amazing thing, and could only be improved if the school held all half days on Friday instead of Wednesday. But hey, beggars can't be choosers.

• The PSO President's Council met after school yesterday.

• Department Heads also met after school yesterday.

• The Swim Boosters met last night.

• Today AP US History and AP European History took their exam.

• The Diversity Committee met this morning.

• Boys' Lacrosse takes on Sandwich tomorrow at 9:30 a.m., with J.V. playing at 11 a.m.

Well folks, another weekend is here. Stay safe and enjoy it! I'll see you next week, and reveal my protégé's identity. Cheers.

Phyllis Karlberg of Scituate photographs her friend's award-winning entry, which was an interpretation of a "Night at the Music Circus." Cindy Mc Eachern of Scituate made a musical scale out of the plants and won two awards for her creative piece.

Cohasset's Annette Sechen's plant stretches out to the glowing sunny yellows of the painting "Time" on display at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library. Annette's plant won first place in its class and an Award of Merit.

This piece, "A Day at the Shore," by Marsha Hoar of the Scituate Garden Club, won first place and the Tricolor Award in the Small Design Category. The exhibits and designs were judged and a panel of National Garden Club accredited judges.

Margaret Chapin of the Community Garden Club of Cohasset rearranges her third-place winning entry in the design contest. There were six different themes for the design contest and Margaret chose "A Visit to the Maritime Museum."

DESTINATIONS

Mission accomplished in Antwerp

By Mark Goodman
MGOODMAN@CNC.COM

The date – Monday, April 16. The location – Antwerp, Belgium.

The mission – Get lost in an old European city and experience first-hand the wonder that is one of Belgium's most renown exploits: making beer.

Exiting the train station in downtown Antwerp you find a typical tourist strip, ripe with McDonald's and H+M's and Gaps all playing Gwen Stefani (imagine the South Shore Plaza in Belgium!). I need to get away from this silly region, off the main road, and find a nice little cafe with high quality Belgian brew on hand.

So I sip, and to say it tastes amazingly good would be a vast understatement. It absolutely lives up to the hype of Belgian beers.

I'm walking around the neighborhoods about roughly half an hour maybe, already lost (wisely, I did not get a map at the rail station) when, suddenly, I stumble upon just what I've been looking for: a small town square, with four or five cafes ready to serve. I pick one, sit down, and wait 20 minutes for the jolly Belgian man to take my order; European service at its finest!

I order a mozzarella and tomato salad, one of the few things on the menu I actually understand (it's in Dutch), and to go with, a Grimbergen Trappist beer. The Belgians take their beers quite seriously; many of them are only to be served in a certain glass, made expressly for that beer to — according to the brewers that make them — bring out that beer's specific flavor.

Shortly after placing my order the jolly Belgian man brings out my Grimbergen. It is black with quite a bit of head, much like a Guinness, and served in this grail-shaped glass. I've never drank from a grail before. How do I hold this? Do I hold it with one hand on the side like a regular pint glass? Do I grip it from underneath? With two hands? Do I get down on my knees, hold this grail of barley and hops above my head, arms outstretched, and poor this nectar of the gods from on high into my mouth?

I feel unworthy of this beer.

But, a sight more beautiful my eyes have rarely seen, and it must be enjoyed. So I sip, and to say it tastes amazingly good would be a vast understatement. It absolutely lives up to the hype of Belgian beers. About one-third of the way through the jolly Belgian man brings my salad, a perfect accompaniment to my Grimbergen.

The meal complete, another two hours of wandering lead me to an empty Moroccan café, where I stop in for a Jupiler, one of Belgium's more well-known (though not necessarily best) brews. While sipping the Jupiler the young man behind the counter asked me how I got here, and by here he did not mean Antwerp but rather this part of Antwerp. After leaving the cafe and starting to continue along this road, I can see why he asked this...this is not a very touristy part of town. I am in the Muslim neighborhood, with many of the adult men wearing traditional thobes and many of the adult women wearing shawls.

After weaving from street to street in that area for a little while I make it back out to a main road, where I stop at another cafe to sample more beer. I ask the waitress what she recommends, and she says the "normal" beer there is Haacht. I go with it, and normal is an appropriate adjective to describe it.

Shortly after I start drinking my normal-tasting Haacht I notice a man sitting to my left, and he looks like he came straight from a Hollywood movie set. He is probably early- to mid-50s, silver-gray hair finely coiffed, sunglasses, salt-n-pepper 5 o-clock shadow, cigarette hanging coolly from his lower lip, stylish black blazer, fashionably colorful sport shirt tucked into his perfectly pressed white chinos, rolled up just above the ankle to show off his nice loafers, worn without socks, on his table a very tasty-looking amber brew in a fancy glass.

I am inferior to this man in every way imaginable.

I must have what he is drinking so we can be on level terms, at least suds-wise. After my Haacht is done I ask the waitress for whatever this cool, great, wonderful man is having, and a minute later I have a Palm Especial to call my own. It is quite good, though not as good as the Grimbergen.

After my Palm, I wander around and get lost and stumble upon another cafe again. I am hungry, so I order a steak to go with my Chimay Trippel, another Trappist beer from the monks. The steak comes out about five minutes after I order it, which I find somewhat disconcerting, but I am hungry. It's actually pretty good, and so is the Chimay.

And so is Antwerp. While paying for my salad and Grimbergen, the jolly Belgian man said to me, "Eating and drinking beer, relaxing on a nice, warm day…It is paradise, no?"

For a day, yes.

HHS sophomore barking up the right tree

Organizes event to help Scituate Animal Shelter

By Amy van Aarem
CORRESPONDENT

When William Hall's dog died two years ago his father brought him to the Scituate Animal Shelter to choose a new pet. He left that day with a terrier-mix, named Princess Leia, and a mission to help the struggling shelter raise money.

"When we were at the shelter I realized that the poor living conditions were not the owner's fault — they didn't have a lot of support or money to improve the shelter," William recalls.

The Scituate Animal Shelter — which serves the towns of Cohasset, Hingham, Hull, Norwell and Scituate — is a no-kill shelter. It is a non-profit, tax-exempt organization dedicated to the welfare of companion animals. The shelter rescues abandoned, homeless animals and give them proper care, love and attention.

Because it is a no-kill shelter that supports five towns its space requirements are greater than typical shelters. The shelter is currently working on relocation efforts to a new and improved location on Route 3A in Scituate.

William, a freshman at B.C. High at the time, hatched a plan that helped the Shelter and fulfilled his community service needs as well.

William created "Barkathon" a walk to support the shelter.

"Last year's event was successful. We raised over $1000 for the shelter," he recalls.

Although William has already completed his quota for community service, because of the popularity of last year's event, he will be conducting the Barkathon again.

"Originally, I needed to do some community service – and I thought, why not help out my favorite shelter. I don't need to do it this year, but I want to because I love animals and the shelter needs the help," he says.

William, now a sophomore at Hingham High, has been networking through school and town and hopes to run another successful Barkathon.

"The main goal is to raise money and awareness. This is an ever growing need as this area of the South Shore has more people moving into it and the animal's needs are growing as well," he says.

William Hall of Hingham, organizer of the May 20th Barkathon Walk at Wompatuck State Park to benefit the Scituate Animal Shelter, sits with his two-year-old dog, Princess Leia. William adopted Princess Leia from the Scituate shelter.

William says his family and friends have pitched in to help the cause. "Spencer Holleran, Nickie Campbell, my cousin Carleen Sinton, all of Hingham, and a friend from Hull, Michael Sueter, have helped a lot," he says.

His mother helped to secure the permits and insurance for the event and local proprietors have been donating everything from dog treats to dog costumes for the event. Maggie's Doghouse, the new shop in downtown Hingham, is getting involved too, by making a donation to the Shelter.

"My uncle Pete, who owns a T-shirt company on Martha's Vineyard, donates T-shirts, William says. "They were a big hit last year and he's doing it again this year for us."

William says 100 percent of the money raised will go directly to the shelter, and the cost of the insurance and permits comes "out of our own pockets."

Barkathon 2007 takes place May 20th from 9am-12 pm at Wompatuck State Park in Hingham.

Although the shelter doesn't discriminate between dogs and cats, the Barkathon event is strictly for the pooch.

"We prefer just dogs, so the cats won't get eaten," William explains. Although if you don't own a dog, fear not. "We'll take any kind of dog … robot dog, organic dog, stuffed dog," he says.

3A Farm Fund -The Project

Built in 1991 with a bequest from Eleanor R. Haughey, the Scituate Animal Shelter is located on New Driftway in Scituate and is operated by the Friends of the Scituate Shelter.

In the past 15years, the Animal Shelter has placed more than 2,500 animals of all kinds. The towns of Scituate, Cohasset, Norwell, Hingham and Hull use the facility for holding the stray animals found in their communities. A part-time Director and more than 60 volunteers staff the facility. The Friends of the Scituate Shelter, a non-profit organization, provides funds for medical care, furnishings, equipment and building needs. In recent months, the Friends purchased outdoor kennels, renovated the kitchen and installed new cat condominiums.

The Scituate Animal Shelter also provides educational programs, trap/neuter/release of feral cats, animal care advice and adoptions services, all on a limited basis depending upon available resources.

The Friends negotiated a land acquisition proposal to relocate the Shelter to the 3A Farm on Route 3A in Scituate. The 3A Farm land has over four acres of land, ideal of the relocation of the Shelter and construction of a new 2,500-square-foot facility.

Although funds for the construction are available, funds for the land acquisition, advanced equipment and furnishings, which total $834,000, must be raised through philanthropy.

'Kelley for Ellie' breast cancer event held

Hingham-raised NewsCenter 5 reporter Kelley Tuthill has garnered strong support not only from the local ABC affiliate where she works, but also from the Red Sox and various South Shore merchants in her fight against breast cancer. Kelley, 36, was diagnosed with Stage 3, Level 3 breast cancer, Dec. 22. Shortly after her diagnosis, the wife and mother of two young daughters made the brave decision to turn the camera on herself and chronicle her treatment regimen. Television cameras followed Kelley into the OR for her mastectomy and to subsequent chemotherapy treatments.

Kelley for Ellie took place on this week in the newly renovated Wharf Room at the Boston Harbor Hotel.

"My goal in going public has always been to try to make it easier for the next woman who gets this diagnosis," says Tuthill. "I really want to take the fear out of breast cancer and replace it with hope."

Kelley for Ellie was a fashion show, which benefits the Ellie Fund, a Needham-based breast cancer charity that supports the families of women undergoing treatment for breast cancer. Through its Care for the Caregiver program, the Ellie Fund assists the families of breast cancer patients by helping with childcare, cleaning services, grocery shopping and transportation to doctor appointments.

"The Ellie Fund makes it easier for people to balance their many responsibilities with the challenges of breast cancer treatment," says Tuthill. "It's the perfect fit for me and my colleagues who are supporting me through this event."

Kelley for Ellie took place in the newly renovated Wharf Room at the Boston Harbor Hotel on Thursday night, May 10. The fashions were provided by the Cohasset boutique, Ports & Company. The store's owner, Lisa Lynch, directed the fashion show. Another South Shore supporter is the Charles David Salon of Norwell which donated a team of stylists to assist the models during the event. The models were anchors and reporters from NewsCenter 5, Red Sox wives and representatives from the Boston Harbor Hotel. Kelley for Ellie was co-chaired by Susan Wornick, NewsCenter 5 anchor and Stacey Lucchino of the Red Sox.

"Breast cancer touches all of our lives, and Kelley Tuthill is the latest person through which we can collectively fight the fight," says Wornick. "Beyond becoming an educator, Kelley has become a vehicle to channel our energy and frustrations about this disease and make a difference. The response we have had from all of the event's supporters has been immediate and enthusiastic. Clearly, Kelley is making a difference in many people's lives."

Kelley's video journal titled "Kelley's Story," has been airing on the 11 o'clock news on NewsCenter 5. To view segments from her video diary or read her personal accounts, visit thebostonchannel.com/health/10723820/detail.html.

Susan Wornick, NewsCenter 5 anchorwoman and co-chair of the Kelley for Ellie Event; Lisa Lynch, owner of Ports & Company; the Cohasset boutique that supplied the fashions for the event; and NewsCenter 5 reporter Kelley Tuthill, who was raised in Hingham.

A lasting impression

Singer gets personal with Tony Bennett tribute

By R. Scott Reedy
CORRESPONDENT

Singer Dane Vannatter promises plenty of familiar music will be on the song list when he performs his tribute to Tony Bennett at Raffael's in Hull next month, just not every song made famous by the legendary crooner.

"I'm not sure about 'I Left My Heart in San Francisco.' I haven't made up my mind about whether or not I will include it, because it is not my favorite song. This show is not really about the hits of Tony Bennett, but more about one album, 'Alone Together,' that really influenced me when I was very young and which has since become the basis of my tribute to Tony Bennett," explained Vannatter by telephone last week from his home in Watertown. "The album came out on Columbia in 1964, and so far it has not been released on CD. It was part of my Dad's album collection, which I didn't always take seriously. I remember when I heard this one, though, immediately thinking how very honest and vulnerable Bennett sounded on this album. It is a collection of perfect songs that mean a lot to me personally."

One in particular still stands out to Vannatter as being very different from the music Bennett and most other male vocalists were recording in the 1960s.

"His voice sounds gorgeous on a track called 'Poor Butterfly.' He performs the song in a non-belting, soft and beautiful style that I love more each time I hear it."

Vannatter, 45, has previously done musical tributes to Cole Porter, Duke Ellington and female songwriters including Dorothy Fields, but this is the first time he has developed an entire show around one singer. Like Bennett, Vannatter will be backed by a jazz quartet of piano, bass, drums and reeds with Dick Johnson of the Artie Shaw Orchestra on the latter.

Singer Dane Vannatter

"I've been wanting to do a show based on this album for a long time. This music is very personal to me," says Vannatter, who spent his early years in Muncie, Ind., before heading east to attend Northeastern University.

"Growing up, I spent a great deal of time with my grandparents who were fundamentalists. There was no television in their house, but there was a piano and a guitar. My grandfather was a minister and, through his church, my grandmother was very connected to music. I knew I liked music, too, from a very early age, but I had no idea how to pursue it as a career. In fact, my first part in a high school production was in 'Oklahoma!' but in a non-singing part. I dabbled in performing in those years, but when it came time for college I studied journalism first at Indiana University and then at Northeastern. After graduating, I stayed in Boston and did a lot of work in arts administration and a little on the Boston theater scene. In those days, I had no idea about the cabaret world or how to plug into it. For that matter, I didn't know the jazz or club scene either."

That all changed for Vannatter on Halloween night in 1990.

"Several of my friends and I had gone out to Diamond Jim's at the Lenox Hotel in Boston to say goodbye to another friend who was relocating to Chicago. It was Halloween, so I still had the cow costume on that I had worn to work that day. Luckily, they were having a costume contest at the club that night. Since it was a piano bar, the contest required that you sing. I did 'Summertime,' from 'Porgy and Bess,' the one song I knew I could get through, and it brought down the house. For my encore, I did 'If I Loved You' from 'Carousel.' I won the contest, which was dinner for two at the hotel. Not long after, I entered a juried singing competition where I went up against 14 professional singers. I won that one, too, and I knew there was no turning back."

After studying with cabaret coach Michael Oster and attending the annual Cabaret Symposium at the Eugene O'Neill Theatre Center in New London, Conn., Vannatter soon started booking gigs and getting noticed. In the years since, he has played local venues like Scullers Jazz Club, recorded several CDs, and earned a loyal following on the New York cabaret scene. As evidence of his Big Apple acclaim, Vannatter won a 2006 Back Stage Bistro Award for Outstanding Excellence in Cabaret as Best Vocalist for his engagement at Danny's Skylight Room. The singer enjoys his New York notoriety, but plans on keeping his local address.

"Years ago, I almost moved to New York, but I just couldn't leave this area," says Vannatter, who supplements his singing with work as a yoga instructor. "New York is great, of course, but I knew it wouldn't do anything for my soul. Home is really important to me. And this area is home to me, now. I just don't think I could live anywhere else."

JM Productions Dinner Theatre will present Dane Vannatter at Raffael's, 45 Hull Shore Drive, Hull, on June 15. For tickets and information, visit jmproductionspresents.com or call 617-786-7469. Reservations may also be made by calling Raffael's Nantasket at 781-925-4515.

Movie review

Jude (Deborah-lee Furness) gives Claire (Laura Linney) a piece of her mind.

Take haunting trip to 'Jindabyn'

Jindabyne (A-)

By James Verniere
FILM CRITIC

An unsettling throwback to the New Wave films of such pioneers as Peter Weir, "Jindabyne" has a notable pedigree.

Made in Australia with a cast headed by Irishman Gabriel Byrne and American Laura Linney, the film, a drama about a small town in New South Wales shaken by a murder, is an adaptation of a short story by the American author Raymond Carver.

Byrne is Stewart Kane, a former rally racer and the unhappy mechanic-husband of Claire (Linney), an attractive, high-strung woman who ruffles feathers wherever she goes. They have a sensitive, young son Tom (Sean Rees-Wemyss), who wants to go fishing with his dad, but must first learn to swim.

Among their friends in the town of Jindabyne are Jude (Deborra-Lee Furness) and Carl (John Howard), who are raising their troubled granddaughter Caylin-Calandria (spooky-eyed Eva Lazzaro) since the murder of her mother, their daughter.

On an annual fishing trip with his buddies, Stewart and his friends discover the body of a murdered aboriginal girl in a river and decide to continue fishing. When they later report the discovery, they are raked over the coals by the national press, castigated by police and stigmatized by their townsfolk.

An adaptation of Carver's story "So Much Water So Close to Home" by newcomer Beatrix Christian, "Jindabyne" eerily recalls not only such classic exercises in unease as Weir's "The Last Wave" and "Picnic At Hanging Rock," but also John Boorman's classic adaptation of James Dickey's "Deliverance."

(The Carver story on which "Jindabyne" is based was also incorporated in a more fragmented form in Robert Altman's great 1993 Carver adaptation "Short Cuts.")

Aussie director Ray Lawrence ("Lantana") has an uncanny ability to generate anxiety using natural sounds and images that would not be out of place in "National Geographic."

An artificial lake over the "drowned," the original town of Jindabyne is enough to raise the "Poltergeist" gooseflesh on any viewer. In "Jindabyne," the natural world is haunted and alive with danger, not the least of which is a serial killer whose hunting ground is a lonely stretch of road in the Outback.

The film's ending, involving a ceremony to placate the dead and an attempted reconciliation, does not soothe jangled nerves.

The cast is sensational, especially Linney, who makes the semi-stable Claire, a classic "difficult woman," almost unbearably off-putting and yet essentially decent and loving.

If you're looking for a challenging and haunting alternative to the summer-season sequels, here it is. Even that title, which means "valley" in an aboriginal language, sticks with you.

Rated R. "Jindabyne" contains profanities, sexual situations and disturbing images of a victim of murder.

Because You Have A Trust... You Must Attend This FREE Workshop!!!

Dennis B. Sullivan
Attorney At Law, CPA

If you have a trust agreement, I have some bad news for you; your trust is probably outdated. Trusts drafted by many attorneys do not contain the protective provisions we included in our recently developed "Life Plan™". How do I know? Last year I gave numerous workshops throughout the state and will even offer $1,000 to anyone who can present an estate plan that contains all 19 of the protective provisions we currently use when designing a plan. Most estate plans had fewer than 3 of these provisions. Only one estate plan even came close to having all 19 provisions. Consider this...

THIS YEAR YOU ARE SIX TIMES MORE LIKELY TO BECOME DISABLED THAN DIE!

This alarming statistic shouldn't surprise you...you see it every day. Unfortunately, the number of people becoming disabled will double in the next decade. Your trust was designed to deal with death not disability, but that can be corrected.

A LAWSUIT IS FILED EVERY THIRTY SECONDS – MORE THAN 90 MILLION ARE FILED IN THE UNITED STATES EACH YEAR

Your trust can be modified to protect the surviving spouse's interest in the Decedent's estate from frivolous lawsuits. Currently, it is only designed to reduce estate taxes. Would you like it to do both?

MOST POWERS OF ATTORNEY ARE OUTDATED WHEN PRESENTED (MANY ARE NOT EVEN AVAILABLE)

Your Power of Attorney is used to allow someone to act on your behalf when you are disabled. Unfortunately, these documents keep becoming outdated. The comprehensive version we previously used was revised in 3 major areas after the Terri Schiavo case. Assuming your document is current, will it be available in an emergency? Hospitals report in 3 out of 4 cases the Patients' Health Care Proxy is not available when needed. Our new program makes this document accessible 24 hours a day, 7 days a week via the telephone.

IN 2001, MORE YOUNG PEOPLE FILED FOR BANKRUPTCY THAN GRADUATED FROM COLLEGE!

The amount of assets that will be inherited by the next generation is staggering. Unfortunately, the amount our children or beneficiaries will lose due to financial difficulties such as bankruptcy, lawsuits and divorce will be just as staggering. If you could distribute your estate in such a way as to protect your children or beneficiaries from their creditors for life... would you? I would be surprised if you said no. After all, isn't that why your trust was created in the first place?

MOST ESTATES DON'T MAKE IT TO THE GRANDCHILDREN!

If you can protect your estate during the life of your children, then it will be available for your grandchildren. Wouldn't it be nice if your estate, whatever is left, could then transfer estate tax free to your grandchildren? It can, we just need to put the appropriate language in the document.

THE BIGGEST THREAT TO YOUR ESTATE IS NO LONGER PROBATE & TAXES...

IT'S DISABILITY, OUTDATED DOCUMENTS UNPROTECTED DISTRIBUTIONS...

DUE TO RECENT CHANGES, YOUR LIVING TRUST COULD BECOME A LIVING HELL.

WE HAVE DEVELOPED A SOLUTION FOR EVERY PROBLEM!

ATTEND OUR FREE WORKSHOP

Call our office at 800-964-4295 to reserve seating for this important workshop. During this call we will inform you of the exact location of the workshop. At this workshop you will learn the details about your trust that perhaps your attorney never explained. We'll explain the new laws that directly affect your estate planning documents, and how to take steps to correct these problems. All those in attendance will receive a 19-point checklist for a "self analysis" of their estate planning documents. As a bonus, if you bring this advertisement to the workshop you will receive a FREE REPORT on the new (February 2006) Medicaid Laws. You will discover how to protect your home and assets from increasing medical and nursing home costs, taxes, and the costs and time delays of probate.

YOU CANNOT STOP THE WORLD FROM CHANGING...BUT YOU CAN USE NEW TECHNIQUES TO PROTECT YOU AND YOUR LOVED ONES.

Don't wait until you actually have a problem before you deal with it. By waiting until the problem happens you typically can only minimize the damage, rather than prevent it. Let's prevent it! By attending this FREE workshop you will receive a 19-point review of your existing trust, or a review of your estate planning goals and help creating a personalized plan. We will tell you the areas of vulnerability your estate has and how to protect your assets.

Train on track

First run scheduled for Saturday

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

It's been years in the making and there is still more work to be done, but on Saturday morning the first train of the revived Greenbush line will make its way through Cohasset. It's a clear signal that construction is concluding and commuter trains will soon be part of the streetscape.

But most importantly, officials say this first test train means that the Greenbush line is now an active railway and precautions need to be taken by all residents. Adults, children and pets should stay off and away from the tracksand vehicles should not stop on the tracks at any time.

"Please be aware that test trains may operate at any time, day or evening, seven days a week, and will not operate on a set schedule," stated Cashman Balfour Beatty (CBB) Community Outreach Director Tom Carroll in a widespread e-mail sent out last Friday announcing the news.

The test train that is set for tomorrow, Saturday, will be the first of what will become regular occurrences. In late May it is expected that test trains will begin operating on a regular basis. In mid-July, CBB and the MBTA expect to be operating a large number of test trains.

Tom Gruber, the town's Greenbush liaison, describes Saturday as a "big day," and one that was bound to happen. Yet, he says that the construction remains ongoing, and taking one look at Cohasset's far-from-complete station is an indication.

Patriotic display

The Operation Salute truck, driven by Bob Lehmiller from Clearfield, Utah, arrives at the American Legion Post on Summer Street Saturday afternoon with 380 U.S. flags that will be installed in the Field of Honor on the island across from the Legion. The flags will fly from May 20-30.

Bob Lehmiller displays the American flag on his truck after driving 40 hours from Clearfield, Utah to Cohasset to deliver 380 flags, as well as display components, for Cohasset's Memorial Day observance. Lehmiller's son, Sgt. Michael Lehmiller, was killed in action is 2005 in Afghanistan. He travels the country in his patriotic decorated trailer on his own time and money.

Deirdre Wigmore, wife of Commander Tom Wigmore of the Sons of the American Legion Squadron 118, photographs the flag truck arriving at Legion Hall.

A tip of the hat

Historical Society presents "A Century of Hats"

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

There was a time when the crowning piece of fashion was worn on the top of one's head. It could be a tam, a cloche, a boater, a clip, a pillbox, a leghorn, a beanie or a turban — but whatever shape the hat took it was often the accessory that stole the show.

This summer the Cohasset Historical Society will unveil a collection of these show-stopping fashions.

"A Century of Hats" exhibit at the Pratt Building will feature more than 100 pieces that span 100 years — 1860 to 1960. Although women's hats take up most of the exhibit space, there are some men and children's head topping pieces. Other interesting historical accessories like parasols, hatboxes, beaded handbags and silk gloves, are scattered throughout the displays.

"Life has changed, fashion has changed, that's what makes this exhibit so important," says Jean Hajjar, co-curator of the exhibit. She says that in past times when women bought an outfit, a hat was part of the ensemble.

Holding two of the colorful hats that appear in the new Historical Society exhibit, Martha Hurtig, left, and Jean Hajjar are all smiles. The co-curators of the exhibit became enthralled with the many fashions women used to wear on their head. Some of the pieces date back to 1860.

Favorite season: Summer, of course

Favorite holiday: Christmas

Favorite junk food (or meal): JJ's pepper cheeseburger (yum!)

Best magazine: La Cucina Italiana

Best movie (or actor): Ever After

Best TV show: Survivor

Most embarrassing moment: I was scheduled to sing at a cathedral in West Roxbury when I couldn't find door to get in. Person you'd most like to meet: My mom's dad

Biggest worry: Something happening to my children.

Best part of Cohasset: Oooh it's too hard to pick just one—could it be the people or the coast…or maybe it's JJ's!

Rain gardens growing

Fifteen more planned to protect watershed

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

Lily Pond provides 90 percent of Cohasset's drinking water, and protecting that supply through safeguarding the Lily Pond Watershed is an ongoing and chief goal of the Water Commission. As part of its multi-faceted approach, the Water Department will be installing 15 new rain gardens in the watershed in the coming weeks.

On Wednesday evening, the Water Commission held an informational meeting with residents who will abut the rain gardens to hear concerns and explain the purpose behind the effort. The rain gardens will be installed on town property.

Rain gardens are a state Department of Environmental Protection approved stormwater "best management practice." The low-impact development strategy is designed to create a natural filtration process to treat stormwater runoff. The vegetation and soils remove pollutants such as nutrients, suspended solids, salt, and petroleum by-products. The goal is to reduce flooding by slowing the flow and to have cleaner stormwater throughout the Lily Pond watershed.

Rain gardens work naturally to clean stormwater runoff. In a rain event, the stormwater will be directed into the rain garden.

"The rain gardens will be depressed [into the ground] to naturally collect water," said Water Commissioner John McNabb. The depression is about six inches deep. The water is then pre-filtered through a hardwood mulch layer prior to infiltrating through the bioretention mix (a combination of shredded hardwood, course sand and topsoil). The bioretention layer removes mineral sediments and contaminants such as nitrogen and phosphorus, which are damaging to the watershed.

After the water is filtered through the bioretention layer, it passes through a peastone under-drain layer and is directed into a perforated PVC drainage pipe connected to the existing stormwater drainage system.

The end result will be treated runoff and significantly lower levels of nutrients and contaminants, which the Water Commission says will translate into an improved water quality at Lily Pond.

The Water Commission, with the help of Norfolk Ram Group engineer consultant Mark Bartlett, has determined four targeted neighborhoods for the rain gardens: Veteran's Project on Bear Hill overlooking Peppermint Brook; King Street abutting Lily Pond; Beechwood Street by Bound Brook; and Aaron River Road abutting the Aaron River Reservoir. These neighborhoods were chosen because they abut tributaries that then lead to Lily Pond.

The Rain Garden Project has been divided into three phases. The first phase was completed last year with the construction of six rain gardens.

"We have a year of experience and we feel very confident in going forward," said McNabb. The project is currently in phase two with the installation of 15 more rain gardens. The final phase will include plans for 25 more rain gardens; in total more than 45 rain gardens will be constructed.

"[The Rain Garden Project] is expected to have a major impact," said McNabb. From other similar rain garden projects McNabb says he expects the gardens to reduce the amount of nutrients and other solids from going into Peppermint Brook and Lily Pond at least an estimated 50 percent. With a decrease in nutrients entering Lily Pond, the plant will not have to work as hard to get out the nutrients and contaminants in the water.

The rain gardens above the ground will be planted with a variety of low growing perennials and shrubs. Each plant was chosen based on its functionality and aesthetics. A landscape designer and the Cohasset Garden Club were consulted to find the best plants to suit both the town's unique soil and climate. Winter weather with snow stockpiling at the side of the road and salt were considered when designing the rain gardens. The plant choices are also hardy — with the ability to thrive even in summer droughts.

Water Commission Chairman Glenn Pratt made sure that the attending residents did not find the rain gardens damaging to the look of their property. Their responses were fairly positive.

"I don't think it will be detrimental in any way, shape or form," said Bob Garvey of 3 Bayberry Lane, who will have a rain garden installed on town property abutting his own. Residents were encouraged to call the Water Department if there were any problems with the rain garden during or after its construction.

The Water Department will provide all the maintenance to the rain gardens and associated catch basins at no cost to the abutting homeowners. A line item in the yearly budget will be set aside for maintenance of those areas.

The Rain Garden Project is financed in part by a water quality grant administered by the DEP. The town received $250,000 in grant money and the remainder of the project will be funded through a state lending program that allows borrowing at a 2 percent interest rate. The entire project will likely cost around $800,000 and will conclude in 2008.

A similar grant is currently being pursued by the Stormwater Management Committee to install rain gardens and other low-impact development designs in the Little Harbor district.

In December 2006 the Rain Garden Project was honored with a "Smart Growth Award" by the state Executive Office of Environmental Affairs. The awards recognize community efforts that incorporate more environmentally conscious and sustainable methods.

The project is part of a long-term Surface Water Supply Protection Plan that outlines efforts to protect the watershed. The commission has also aggressively purchased undeveloped land in the watershed over the last few years.

Seals on beach no cause for alarm

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

In the spring months, it is not unusual to see a seal basking on the Cohasset coastline. Last Wednesday, a seal came ashore on along Atlantic Avenue and drew a crowd of interested onlookers. A resident called the police to report that a seal had beached itself. The Animal Control Officer Paul Murphy was contacted and checked on the seal later in the day.

"This is the time [of year] when they come up to the beach and warm up. Then they will find their way back out," said Murphy. This visiting seal safely returned to the ocean.

Police Chief James Hussey said if residents observe a seal on the shoreline they should not go near or feed the seal. However, if a resident believes that the seal may be sick or in distress, the police have a list of appropriate parties that can evaluate its health.

Suspicious activity

The police are investigating a call received from a concerned adult who reported that a white male, age 40-50, in a vehicle took a picture of a group of girls who were jumping off the bridge on Border Street. The police spoke to the concerned adult and the group of girls. There was varying descriptions of the vehicle and no one at the scene got a license plate number.

However, later in the week the police received new information — the vehicle plate number. Chief Hussey said that although there is no criminal charge in this incident, the male did make the girls uneasy.

"Officers will speak to him about what we think is an inappropriate activity," said Chief Hussey.

Erratic operation

A car pulling out from the junction of Beechwood Street onto Chief Justice Cushing Highway almost caused a traffic accident, police said. The accident-prone intersection continues to cause traffic safety concerns. The vehicle continued down Route 3A driving erratically. The vehicle was pulled over by the police and the driver was issued a citation for failing to stay in marked lanes and passing in a no passing zone.

Car accident

On Friday morning, a 2006 GM pick-up truck was hit from behind after stopping to allow three pedestrians to cross the road. Around 11:10 a.m. the pick-up truck slowed to a stop on Ripley Road heading toward the village. The operator came to a complete stop to allow for one adult and two kids to cross the road. A 2004 black Jeep failed to see the pick-up truck stop and hit the vehicle from behind.

The operator of the Jeep was cited for following too close. The driver of the pick-up truck was transported to South Shore Hospital for minor injuries.

While at the scene of the accident, a police cruiser's engine began smoking. The officer noticed the smoke coming from the engine, turned off the vehicle and called for a tow. Chief Hussey said that the smoke, not fire, was due to a couple of wires overheating. The cruiser was repaired by Robbin's Garage and was back in service that same afternoon.

Vandalism ends well

A truck leaving Joseph's Hardware on CJC Highway backed into and struck four bags of marble chips. The bags broke and some of the contents spilled onto the pavement. According to a hardware employee the driver of the vehicle got out of the car, checked the damage, then drove off. The hardware employee took down the car's license plate number and called the police.

An officer observed the car in Tedeschi Plaza and waited for the driver to come out of a store. After a conversation between the officer and driver, the driver agreed to go back to Joseph's Hardware and pay for the damaged goods.

Underage DUI

A 19-year old female was arrested and charged with operating a vehicle under the influence of alcohol. On Saturday night around 11:30 p.m. an officer observed two cars stopped in the middle of Margin Street near Gleason Road. When the second car realized the first was not moving, it drove around. The officer pulled over to see if everything was OK with the first car.

The operator of the vehicle appeared nervous and two passengers were outside of the vehicle. After an investigation, the officer determined that the driver had been drinking alcohol and was operating under the influence. The operator of the vehicle was placed under arrest. The officer felt that the two passengers had also been drinking and were unable to drive home. The passengers were placed in protective custody and the car was towed.

Headway to cleaner harbor

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

Some residents would say that Cohasset Harbor is the jewel of the town. During the summer it is bustling with activity from boaters, swimmers, sailors, rowers and lobstermen.

The Harbor Health Committee wants to keep the harbor as busy and vital as it was when the town was founded. The group's latest effort follows on the heels of other South Shore and Cape Cod towns that have instituted a "No Discharge Area" for their surrounding waters.

A No Discharge Area, or NDA, is a designated body of water in which the overboard discharge of all boat sewage, even if it is treated, is prohibited. In an NDA, vessel sewage must be discharged to a shore-side or mobile pumpout facility.

"This is a pro-active approach," says Harbor Heath Committee chairman Karen Quigley. "It will protect the water and premeditate the forming of bacteria."

The Cohasset Harbor Health Committee is working hand in hand with similar organizations in Scituate and Marshfield to instate a NDA, for the body of water off the towns' shores. A tri-town public informational meeting will be held at the Scituate Pubic Library on Tuesday, May 22, at 7 p.m. to discuss ideas, options, and issues regarding the NDA nomination and process.

Under the federal Clean Water Act it's illegal to discharge untreated sewage from a vessel into US waters within three miles of shore. However, boats with certain types of functioning sanitation devices may discharge treated effluent in the coastal waters, harbors and bays, unless a NDA has been established.

If successful in its pursuit of a NDA, Cohasset will join eight other NDAs, including the coastal waters off Plymouth, Kingston, Duxbury and all of Buzzards Bay. Quigley says the effort is coming up the South Shore coast — Hull and Quincy are proposing a similar NDA — and it only makes sense that Cohasset and its surrounding municipalities to take part as well.

Quigley says the Cohasset NDA will likely extend three miles offshore to line up with the NDA's already established south of the town, although some consideration will be taken to make the boaters aware of where the NDA ends and it is safe to discharge.

Boats with Marine Sanitation Devices (MSDs) Type I and Type II can discharge treated effluent into the harbor. MSDs treat the sewage to lower the counts of fecal coliform and reduce the amount of solids. Type III MSD, commonly known as holding tanks, treats the effluent with disinfectant and deodorant.

Cohasset Harbor has suffered from bacterial pollution, which has resulted in the Harbor not meeting state water quality standards, beach closures, and shellfish bed closures. A NDA is a tool towns can use to protect their waters from increased bacteria in the water.

"Aside from the obvious protection against even accidental discharge, it's a way to make out-of-town boaters respect our waters as well," says Quigley. From a political standpoint, the EPA will look upon the fact that the town is pursuing NDA designation positively, says Quigley.

The Harbor Health Committee has contacted local entities that will likely be affected by the NDA designation: Yacht Club; the Sailing Center; the Cohasset Harbor Marina; Board of Health; Conservation Commission; harbormaster; and the Sandy Beach Association.

"Some were amazed something like this wasn't already in place," says Quigley, who indicated that the other towns involved have gotten similar positive responses. "The stakeholders are behind this effort."

Harbormaster Lorri Gibbons hopes through the institution of a NDA designation, she will be called upon more frequently to use the town-owned pump out boat.

"[The NDA] is a great way to control pollution and make people aware of the pumpout boat," says Gibbons. The town has had a pumpout boat for about 12 years. The 21-foot boat is specially designed for pumpouts.

"We do a fair number of pumpouts each summer, but I always would like to see more," says Gibbons.

The process to get a NDA designation is a unique one. Towns are required to request an application from the EPA; the designation is not one that is imposed upon a coastal area. If all goes well, Cohasset, along with Scituate and Marshfield, will request an application following the public meeting on Tuesday. A representative from the Coastal Zone Management will aid the towns with the application.

The Harbor Health Committee will meet with the Board of Selectmen following the public meeting to ensure all parties are on the same page. The committee got approval from the selectmen to move forward with the process of applying for a NDA designation in December 2006.

Cohasset is just a part of a greater movement to protect the waters off the Massachusetts coast.

"Our ultimate goal is to have the entire coast a no-discharge zone," says Quigley.

Lending her talent to the cause

Simpson organizes event for Relay for Life

By Nancy White
NWHITE@CNC.COM

Cohasset High School junior Amanda Simpson has organized a talent show featuring The McCoy Brothers and teachers from the Cohasset Middle/High School on Saturday, June 9.

Amanda Simpson is on a mission — a mission to help people in any way she can.

The high school junior got involved this year in the Relay for Life and is doing everything possible to help the event and the cause.

"Anything we asked her to do, she'd do," says Cohasset's Relay for Life Chairman Harry St. Onge, "but then she said she wanted to do more."

With a true volunteer's spirit and enthusiasm, she took it upon herself to organize an event to raise money for the relay. A Talent Show featuring performances by middle-high school teachers and displays of student artwork is set for Saturday, June 9.

"Hopefully it will get people psyched up for the relay," says Amanda. Cohasset's Relay for Life will begin on Friday, June 15, at 3 p.m. and continue until Saturday, June 16, at 10 a.m. The American Cancer Society's overnight benefit raises money to find a cure for cancer.

Amanda's desire to help people was cultivated by assisting her mother, who suffered from juvenile diabetes since age 12, in managing her disease. Amanda helped her mother around the house and reminded her when to she needed to eat.

"It was something I grew up with so I didn't really mind," says Amanda. Sadly, Amanda's mother passed away two years ago.

Amanda's childhood was atypical; she attended eight different schools in seven years so her mother could be near the best doctors. All that moving around and attending different schools she says was difficult in the beginning but it instilled in her a love of travel and meeting different types of people.

Her vibrant personality and volunteerism has made an impact at a Falmouth hospital and a program for special needs kids. Creating an event that both helps a cause and brings people together is right up her alley.

"It's been a lot of hard work," says Amanda but she has never lost interest. She says she enjoys all the planning and details that go along with putting an event like this together. With the support and advice of St. Onge and her community service teacher, Jack Buckley, she has made the event an impending reality.

"You don't know what someone can do until they go out and do it—she's terrific," says St. Onge. "She's been an inspiration to all of us involved with the Relay."

Amanda got involved in the relay through Buckley's community service class at the high school. Her involvement began by making calls to team captains and recently worked the lights at the relay fundraising concert in April.

This will be Amanda's second year participating in the relay and she is an example of what the relay is all about, says St. Onge. The Relay for Life is about raising money for the American Cancer Society, but it's also about raising awareness of the cause. Events, like Amanda's talent show, work to raise awareness and get more people interested in getting involved.

"I got excited about it after last year. It was so much fun," she says. She and her friends walked around the track throughout the night. "But I didn't know the whole gist of it until I started working with [St. Onge]."

"People don't pick being cancer patients, they don't really get a choice," Amanda said.

The Talent Show will feature exhibitions from a range of artistic talents from music to art to poetry. The performance part of the show will showcase the musical renderings from some Middle-High School teachers. The McCoy Brothers, a local band, will be headlining the show. Three teachers have joined together to perform as a band and as individuals. One teacher has volunteered to show off his talent on an electric guitar. Another teacher will wow the audience with a poetry reading in a dramatic Scottish accent, "it's very funny," says Amanda.

"It'll show a different side of the teachers," says Amanda, one the students don't typically see in the classroom. "It will be a fun switchover because usually in talent shows like these it's the kids that perform."

With the help of high school art teacher Nina Berkowitz, students will be working on pieces that represent the relay for the artist. They could use the colors from the relay, create a collage or another creative idea. The end products will be on display and for sale at the event.

"Some people think that talent is art so I didn't want to rule them out," says Amanda.

Amanda has already received a positive response from the community. Parents have volunteered to make cookies for the event and Walgreen's (where Amanda works part-time) has donated bottled water. Amanda visited local merchants to ask for donated gift certificates for a raffle.

Ballots will be collected from the audience to determine the "Best in Show," combining both art and performance.

Amanda hopes that students, parents and the greater Cohasset community will attend the event and support the Relay for Life.

"It's going to be a fun night," Amanda says.

The Talent Show will be held at 7 p.m. on Saturday, June 9 at the Cohasset Middle-High School Auditorium. Tickets are $8 and will be sold at the door. Everyone is welcome and all proceeds will go to the Relay for Life to benefit the American Cancer Society.

MARKET UPDATE

The Spring market has arrived early and buyers have returned in force. The inventory in Cohasset has gone from over 100 homes on the market this fall to 50 homes currently. Unlike other towns, Cohasset has a lack of inventory which creates more demand than supply. Values have clearly hit bottom and with the coming train we are anticipating modest appreciation. If you are thinking about selling or buying, please call our office for a market consultation. We may even have a buyer waiting for a home like yours.

GARDEN WITH FRIENDS

The annual Garden Friends Plant Sale of the Community Garden Club of Cohasset will be held on the grounds of the Cohasset Historical Society, 106 South Main St., on Saturday, May 19, from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m.

There will be a wide selection of annuals, perennials and shrubs for sale. Most of the plants have been successfully grown in local gardens. Also available are herbal products from The HERB FARMacy of Salisbury, Mass., and copies of The Eclectic Gardener, a handbook for gardeners written by CGCC members. This book is filled with gardening and lawn care information, floral arrangement ideas, seasonal recipes and suggestions for nature walks. This would be a perfect gift for any gardener-new or old. Proceeds from the sale help fund the club's annual scholarship and community projects like Junior Gardeners and Garden Therapy at Cohasset Knoll Nursing Home.

Greenscapes program seeks to educate

For several years, the Water Commission and the Water Resource Protection Committee have sponsored Cohasset's participation in the North & South River Watershed Association's Greenscapes program. The Greenscapes program seeks to educate homeowners about organic lawn care practices and the benefits to children, pets, the environment and ourselves. For information about Greenscapes, visit www.greenscapes.org.

What we put on our lawns doesn't necessarily stay there: chemical fertilizers and pesticides find their way into water resources such as streams, ponds, harbors and the drinking water supply by leaching through the soil or through storm water runoff.

The following is a list of free Greenscapes workshops. You can register by visiting http://greenscapes.org/Event-7.html or by calling 781-635-2501.

Strategies for Reducing Inputs to Lawns – This program will be held from 7 to 9 p.m., Monday, May 21, at South Shore Vocational Technical School in Hanover and includes a discussion on the use of complementary plants. Presented by Deb C. Swanson of Plymouth County Extension. Learn how to reduce fertilizer, pesticides and water by careful site assessment, plant selection and proper planting. Topics include low input lawns, ideas to minimize lawns, low maintenance ground covers, herbaceous perennials and ornamental grasses.

Organic Landscaping and Lawn Care – Learn from a panel of three organic landscape professionals about all aspects of keeping your yard looking great and free of toxic chemicals at 4 p.m., Sunday, June 3, at Holly Hill Farm, 230 Jerusalem Road. Topics will include specifics of lawn care, soil health, pest control, lawn alternatives, weed management and more. Whether you want to do it yourself or hire someone to care for your yard, this workshop is for you. Instructors include Joe Cotter of Paradigm Landscaping, Cindy Prentice of Garden Resources and Dave Macdonald of Summit Landscaping. Fee: $10 for non-members and $7 for members. The event is sponsored by Friends of Holly Hill Farm, Inc, a non-profit organization dedicated to offering educational programs. To register or for information contact hollyhillfarmer@yahoo.com or call 781-383-1455.

"When you see people wearing hats today, they are either baseball hats or beach hats," says Martha Hurtig, chairwoman of the costume and textiles of the Society.

"We started working on the exhibit back in February and it's just grown as we've come across ideas and thoughts," says Hurtig. The exhibit has been months in the making and is composed of many hats found in the Historical Society's archived costumes and textiles. They were re-discovered after the Society relocated to the former library on South Main Street in 2003.

"Every box we opened was a treasure," says Hajjar. Both she and Hurtig have spent scores of hours preparing the historical artifacts for viewing. This will be the first time the hats have been a part of a Historical Society exhibit.

"The women's hats caught our fancy," says Hurtig with a smile. The colorful display features hats with all sorts of fabrics, embellishments and shapes. A velvet hat with the shape of a giant beret, called a tam in millinery terms, in a wine hue is just one of the intriguing finds. Another hat is constructed from faux horsehair called pyroxaline, in the late 1800s at the beginning of synthetic fabrics. Some are covered with artificial flowers, others with lace and other with sequined adornments.

"It's amazing how [hats] have evolved when they are such a basic shape," says Hurtig. The oldest hats in the society's possession are large "leghorn" bonnets circa the 1860s. Although extensive record keeping does not date back to that time, the society has begun the tedious and lengthy process of cataloging their hat collection. Extensive history behind the pieces is not available, however, many of the pieces have enough character to tell their story without an information card.

"They all have their own story," says Hajjar. "You can almost see the person wearing it."

Members of the community have loaned some of the pieces for display in the exhibit. Some of the more stunning pieces are from the Barren-Bancroft collection. Hajjar's family, longtime Quincy residents, have loaned some of their hats from the first half of the 20th century.

Jean Hajjar, left, and Martha Hurtig stand among some of the hats on display. "A Century of Hats" exhibit at the Historical Society will open on June 1. Hajjar and Hurtig have worked for months to get the head pieces ready for viewing.

"Hats have a history," says Hajjar who references the heyday of hats when a women would hardly ever be seen without something on their head, "women wore hats from day wear to nightwear."

A dainty silk and lace "boudoir cap" will be on display to represent a style of nightwear headpieces.

"We liked to cover our heads in the past," says Hurtig.

At the close of the exhibit Hurtig and Hajjar will pack the hats in acid-free boxes and paper to be properly preserved and stored for the future. The hats will join a vast collection of historic clothing, accessories and quilts at the Pratt Building.

The exhibit has two small satellite displays, one at the Osgood School lobby and the Paul Pratt Memorial Library. Each locale has a small display featuring historic head fashions through the past century for men, women and children.

The Historical Society will open the "Century of Hats" exhibit on June 1 with a cocktail party from 7 p.m. to 9 p.m. Admission will be $10 for members and $12 for non-members. Wine and cheese will be served. Attendees are encouraged to join in the spirit of the exhibit by wearing a favorite or special hat.

From June to August the exhibit will be open to the public on weekdays from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. and the occasional Saturdays. The exhibit is free of charge; however, donations are welcome. Call the Cohasset Historical Society at (781) 383-1434 for more information.

OPINION

Innovation at its best

It's encouraging to see so much innovation taking place in Cohasset when it comes to protecting the environment.

In addition to being known for its tree-lined streets and mansions, Cohasset is considered one of the most beautiful spots on the South Shore — if not the state. There are pristine beaches and coastal waters to rival any community.

It makes protecting the town's fragile resources an even bigger priority. That's why we are so heartened to feature two stories in this week's issue about innovative efforts that take protecting the environment to a new level.

Proposing development of more rain gardens around Lily Pond — the source of 90 percent of Cohasset's drinking water — is action worth applauding and highlighting. Rain gardens are a novel way of managing stormwater runoff. Essentially, these rain gardens work naturally to clean the runoff and during rain, the stormwater is directed right into the gardens.

Rain gardens are a novel way of managing stormwater runoff. Essentially, these rain gardens work naturally to clean the runoff and during rain, the stormwater is directed right into the gardens.

Technocrats can explain to you in detail how this all works scientifically (see page 3 of today's paper), and it is a rather involved process, but one that demonstrates forward thinking on the part of the water commission. Essentially, vegetation and soils will remove pollutants from the rainwater — things such as nutrients, salts and petroleum byproducts.

A total of 15 new gardens will be installed in the next few weeks as part of the water commission's multi-pronged effort to guard the Lily Pond watershed. The rain gardens are expected to be a major defense against pollutants in the area — a clear sign Cohasset and its officials understand the importance of protecting vital resources for generations to come.

Another signal of the town's commitment is featured this week in a story about the harbor health committee attempting to create a "no discharge area" for Cohasset Harbor. It's hard to imagine it isn't already designated as such, but the latest effort joins forces with Scituate and Marshfield to make sure treated effluent isn't dumped in coastal waters of these communities. It is, of course, against federal law to illegally discharge untreated sewage from a boat in waters within three miles of shore. However, right now Cohasset and several other communities have no rules to govern the use of dumping into the ocean certain types of treated effluent from functioning sanitation devices.

That can all change if the "no discharge area" designation is approved. It seems so logical and simple, but without the town being proactive, the practice could continue. And that's definitely not in the best interest of the environment. We support and applaud the harbor health committee's initiative in making this much-needed change.

Just one more reason to feel confident about what's going on in Cohasset to preserve those fragile things that makes the town unique and a much sought-after place to live.

Planning for an emergency

HEALTH NOTES

STEVE BOBO

EDS Staff Training

Most of us have two ways in which we operate: When we are doing familiar tasks such as brushing our teeth, or washing dishes, we run on automatic, coping with familiar chores and fitting them into a routine. Some routines like commuting to work occur the same way day in and day out. Such times have value; they give us time to think of other things — multitasking — sorting silverware while looking at TV; the cell phone while driving, presumably, we can fit the easy stuff in while we're thinking about something else.

Then, at other times, we have to plan our activities; think about what we're doing and the order in which we do it. At times like these, we sometimes have to rehearse just what we want to have happen. Hence EDS training.

Last Monday, at St. Anthony's Parish Hall, as a part of federal regional medical emergency response training for towns on the South Shore, a team of instructors met with volunteers; mostly nurses and medical staff personnel from Cohasset, Hingham, Hull, Scituate, Norwell and other South Shore towns to go over the mechanics of operating an Emergency Dispensing Site, the EDS referred to earlier. Such sites are assembled from volunteers when needed to dispense medication after an emergency in which sick persons may be expected. The emergency may be a flood, an epidemic, an accident, or any other.

A few weeks ago, the South Shore Hospital came to St. Anthony's to provide orientation about the facilities, services, and care it could provide in the event of an emergency. At that meeting, the functions and methods of triage were discussed. The hospital is one of the three triage destination sites for persons affected by emergencies. The EDS is another. The third is release to go home with appropriate instructions, advice and information about local services.

St Anthony's has been designated in the South Shore emergency preparedness plan as the place to go to get medications and help during an emergency. In preparation for an emergency event, the region has about 25 or 30 medical volunteers who have signed up for training. In addition to medical personnel, Region 4B to which Cohasset belongs has begun recruitment of a volunteer corps of support personnel. These are volunteers who wish to help and who may not have medical training. An EDS, in order to function, requires many more clerical and support personnel than clinical staff. Volunteers handle tasks such as registration, greeting, orientation, runners, flow and control of people.

When set up, staffed by volunteers and running, the operation is similar to that of a blood bank or a health clinic. The EDS carries out seven principal functions along with some subsidiary tasks.

After an emergency, the media will announce the availability of an Emergency Dispensing Site and people coming to St. Anthony's will begin the process of getting help. They can expect to encounter seven separate activities. Initially, they will be greeted by someone who will answer questions, explain the EDS, its function and operation and what to expect.

They will then be given forms requesting clinical data, condition, medical information, etc.

The information is reviewed for completeness and accuracy, and for each individual a disposition decision is made. If available information indicates no need for medication or care, the individual will be discharged. If treatment/medication is warranted, it is dispensed.

Families will not be separated, but will proceed through the dispensing site as a unit.

If time is necessary to determine an outcome of medication or a clinical procedure, the individual will be taken to a waiting area, at which point the decision will be made as to disposition; hospitalization, first aid, stabilization or discharge.

Describing what's supposed to happen isn't the same as doing it. The best of plans can be overwhelmed by a catastrophe — or even a relatively minor (in the scale of things) occurrence. Remember, attendance at this training was about 38 volunteers representing towns having an aggregate population of maybe 60,000 people. Are you sure you won't change your mind about volunteering?

Murder on the Greenbush Express

DRIVING WHILE TYPING

JOHN LENGYEL

It was 6:15 on a foggy Tuesday morning. I stood on the platform waiting for the 6:22 train with my partner: a black coffee, no lid. A guy with a scowl and scalding jet black coffee in hand is a guy you don't push around — a message to my fellow low-lifes on their way to South Station. Only I knew it had three sugars that morning, one for every time she'd walked out on me. Three was the magic number, I told myself — -the last time I'd let her play me for a patsy. Even black coffee is god-awful with four sugars.

I tilted my hat down and looked around the platform through the mist. On my left was Sam, one of 400 VPs of something-or-other at Global Gillette. His briefcase tucked between his feet, he read page eight of the Wall Street Journal as usual. What was on page eight, I wondered, that could earn the attention of a free man every morning for six years? Topless stock graphs? Behind Sam was Marshall, another head case claiming to be a "consultant," the professional equivalent of an undeclared major. He leaned against a steel pillar, staring across the tracks at the golf course. Marshall was a bogey golfer. You could see it in his posture. Scratch golfers held their heads higher, even at 6:18am.

Through my life I'd made the most of my observational powers. It was the only thing I could call a talent. That, and my uncanny ability to turn beautiful women against me. I often hoped the train would be a little late so I could ply my skills a few minutes longer. But this morning as always it steamed into Cohasset Station at precisely 6:22. They've got retired Swiss clock makers driving these trains, I thought, as I stepped on board and found a window seat. If United Airlines had ever thought to hire these people they'd still be in business.

I settled in and watched the suburban woods rush by. We dove underground beneath downtown Hingham and popped up again into the murky light. I drank my coffee and wondered just how far I could travel by rail from Cohasset. I thought of Alaska, and Argentina — places so far away that even she might miss me. It was pathetic. I needed a distraction, and as we rolled into Weymouth Landing I got my wish.

Even through the thick morning fog she caught the eye. Dark suit, slim hands, with a walk so ethereal that it can't be described in English, she glided in through the door, glanced left and headed my way. The hat's doing its job, I thought, as she ignored two empty rows and took the seat beside me.

The high point of that seat's career, no doubt.

"You're Lengyel, aren't you?" she said. She was the forward type.

"You Girl Scouts just don't give up," I said.

"I'm looking for my brother. Peter."

Suddenly I wished I'd taken the 6:45.

"You and half the convicted felons in the state. You're Audry Falcourt?"

"I'm willing to pay," she said. "I'm also willing to kill to find him."

"I liked your first point," I said, "but I'm a dead end. Peter and I kind of fell out after he hired your cousin to put a bullet in my neck."

"The way I heard it, you put his girlfriend behind bars."

"Biggest favor I ever did him."

"He didn't see it that way."

"They never do," I said. "That's the problem with love."

"You've licked that problem yourself?" she asked, staring at me. She was someone you didn't push around either. I finished my coffee in one gulp.

"You and I could travel to the tip of Argentina from here, without flying, driving, or walking more than a mile. Did you know that?"

"Where is Peter?" she said. There was mourning in her voice. Who'd have guessed anyone would miss that slime ball?

"Sorry," I said, and I was. But I couldn't help her. Not in the way she wanted. She stood up, and I swear I heard the seat sigh behind her.

"Nice hat," she said, dipping an unseen hand into her purse.

"Thanks."

"Red Sox fan, eh?"

I smiled. "Yeah. You know, they wear this color on the road."

Bing, bong.

"And that concludes our inaugural run of the Greenbush line," said a cheerful voice. "Welcome to South Station."

"Wasn't that fun?" my wife asked the kids.

"Yaaaaaah!" they said. "Can we have ice cream now?"

"John, remind me to pitch that hat when we get home. John?"

"That was cool," I said. And we set off for the Aquarium, where I happened to know that Peter Falcourt sleeps with the fishes.

John Lengyel lives in Cohasset. Now that the Old Colony Railway is complete he plans to travel by train from Cohasset to Alaska and back again, just as soon as he can get the necessary five grand and eight months off.

MAKING TRACKS

TOM GRUBER & MARK BRENNAN

When the last section of harbor wall is complete, the whole wall will be topped with a concrete cap, sidewalk and granite curb will be installed as well as a new fence.

Late last week the Greenbush guys received notice that the MBTA will be running an actual train on the tracks on this Saturday, May 19. We have been told there may be a few cars and a diesel locomotive. The train will be running at a slow speed, about 10 mph. We expect that it will arrive in Cohasset around 11a.m., but that's very approximate. Also, this is an early run and all of the safety equipment at the crossings will not be in place and functioning. Consequently, the train will be obliged to blow its horn at every crossing. There will also be flagmen at each crossing to warn automotive and pedestrian traffic. So, don't be alarmed if you hear the horn. It's not the end of the world. From now on we will be seeing trains on the tracks with an increasing frequency.

Comments on safety

We received an email from a merchant whose place of business is near the Greenbush tracks. They commented on the large number of young people who routinely walk on the railroad tracks. Parents, if you haven't had discussions with your children about train safety you need to start NOW. Every year we read about children injured or worse yet, killed by innocently walking on the tracks. Don't let this tragedy happen in Cohasset. Please, please, please make sure your children are aware of the hazards from trains.

Town parking lot blasting

You probably noticed that there was no blasting this week of the rock next to the Teen Center as we had previously announced. CBB has postponed it until next week. This week an MBTA subcontractor did take a pre-blast survey of the Teen Center. A pre-blast survey is a detailed examination of a building accompanied by photographs or videos to accurately document the existing condition of a building prior to blasting. Based on other schedule changes that we see from time to time, the only way we will know absolutely when blasting will start is when they start. So be on the lookout!

Greenbush Station drainage

Several months ago, we received notice that the MBTA had revised the storm water drainage system for the Greenbush Cohasset Station. The prior drainage plan had most of the surface water draining alongside the tracks behind the old Davenport property (the old boat yard). The new drainage scheme directs most of the water north toward Hingham at the station entrance on Route 3A. The cemetery commission has concerns that the storm water is now being directed at the base of the Gold Star Mother's area of Woodside Cemetery.

We asked the MBTA for copies of the drainage calculations so that they could be reviewed, to no avail. Finally, the DEP sent us a copy, for which we are grateful. The cemetery commission had an independent engineer review these calculations and generated a series of questions that needed clarification. Again, the MBTA would not answer the questions but pointed to the DEP and said it approved them, so talk to the DEP. With the help of the DEP we now have a meeting set to review the issue. Hopefully the MBTA will have its engineer there. We'll see. We do hope that a face-to-face meeting with the appropriate design engineers will resolve the issues and allay the cemetery commission's fears.

Pond and Spring streets

The orphaned poles should finally be removed from Spring Street by the time you read this. The final paving on the South Main Street side of the crossing should be complete by the end of this week. And then, Pond Street will be reopened. This should happen late this week or early next week at the latest. Hallelujah!

Meanwhile, later this week, the temporary crossing on the leg of Spring Street at Ellms Meadow will have closed permanently. CBB has some critical work to do on the tracks before the test train can run on Saturday. CBB has agreed that the road from Cushing to Pond Street will be open when the temporary Spring Street crossing closes. So, for a day or two, until the Spring Street leg near St. Anthony's opens, things may still be a bit chaotic.

We know it all sounds very confusing, and it is. The overall upshot is, by early next week the roads in this area will be in their final configuration and open to all traffic.

Harbor wall work

With the exception of a 20-foot section near the Atlantica parking lot, the stone work for the new wall is complete. The Portadam has been dismantled and was loaded onto a flat bed truck Thursday, ready for its next site.
